PRIME TIMES

"This is a time of courage and a time of challenge."

— President John F. Kennedy, in an address to have been delivered in Austin, Texas, November 22, 1963

Bloomington Senior High School

PRIME TIMES

The year would only be here once. You would only have one chance to use what it offered you, and you had to be ready.

And that meant being aware of what was out there that could make this year in your life first-rate.

And how did your year turn out? You might be amazed, once you think about it. So do that:

Let your mind wander back to a golden time, a once-upon-a-time.

Indeed, a prime time in your life.

Below: They've rehearsed it before, but nothing compares to the real thing: the moment of introduction as the Homecoming Coronation gets underway. Symbols of pride for their fellow juniors, Attendants Anne Lensegrav and Diego Wendt pause on their way down the Coronation rampway. The glittering ceremony again helped renew a sense of student pride and loyalty in the school.

Below: A star is born. And for the JB's Tim Brewer, the moment could not have been finer. In the midst of the Homecoming Pepfest, Brewer leads the school in a sing-along of "Old Time Rock 'n Roll."

Far left: It's 7:20 — a.m., that is — and the school day is minutes from beginning. Paula Hardel watches for a friend amidst the confusion of the arriving school buses.

PRIME

Some

Left: The formality of Eastcliff provides a fitting background for this Homecoming royalty portrait. The official residence for the president of the University of Minnesota, Eastcliff is located on St. Paul's River Boulevard. The royalty: Paul Moe and Barb Spies, Sophomore Attendants; Laura Beckman and Craig Clements, Sophomore Ambassadors; Chris Lembeck and Lisa Jones, Mark Bonjean and Barb Brasket, Senior Royalty; Lisa Ramey and Mike Walsh, Senior Ambassadors; Queen Lisa Pahl and King Dave Meier; Kristie Scherber and John Murphy, Junior Ambassadors; Hope Howard and Paul Adams, Kelly Simons and Kevin Halaska, Senior Royalty; and Diego Wendt and Anne Lensegrav, Junior Attendants.

Some days, it was so good to be alive.

Good to be your age — 15, 16, or 17 — and good to be a student.

Even better, to be a Kennedy student.

Homecoming was one of those days. It couldn't help but be, for the memories you tucked away from that day would stay with you long after everything else about high school had been forgotten.

There it was ... a gym covered over with blue and gold, dazzling with glitter and spotlights and smiles, brimming over with music and applause.

And royalty — friends, after all, but for this moment, royalty — wearing the crowns, capes, and traditions that belong to every year, but only to this school.

Your school.

Yes, you said, that was good.

For it made you feel good to be a student, to see and hear and absorb. To develop a loyalty.

To be here.

Left: Their crowning continues a tradition that goes back 19 years to Kennedy's beginnings. And for Queen Lisa Pahl and King Dave Meier this was a prime time for pride.

PRIME TIMES

Long

Berry collaborate on a pre-lab report. That effort would help them in the next day's lab.

Right from the first day, you were in trouble. That's because from that first hour of class on, you were hopelessly behind.

Behind on your reading, behind on your lab reports, behind on your math problems, steno exercises, and drafting designs.

You were in trouble.

The calendar said that the school year would only last nine months. What the calendar could not know, however, was that nine months for a student are not just ... nine months.

They are an endless exercise in pressure.

The pressure mounted, day by day, night by night, as you struggled through 24-hour timeblocks that never were long enough to allow you to keep up.

Keep up? How? You were not just involved in six classes lasting one hour each. You were entangled in a way of life, of learning, that forced your days to stretch far into nights that ended up being all too short.

School work wasn't the only thing you were behind on. Try sleep.

Above: A night without homework? Dream on. The lamp, the books, and a stack of unfinished work were telltale signs that a student was hard at work — again. For Nick days. Short nights.

Left: Alone in the quiet of his bedroom, he's far away from the maddening rush of school. Even so, Thom Kummer has yet to escape school's pressures, for his work has followed him into bed.

Below: Typing and essay — what awful words to hear together. Worse yet is to have them combined in an assignment. For students lucky enough to have a word processor and a computer, however, life could be OK. No messy correction fluid for Sarah Greimel tonight. Her whole essay would be corrected by the push of a button on her final draft.

Kusz and so many other students, nights filled with work had their own rewards, rewards that came in the form of grades at the end of the semester.

PRIME TIMES

Whom so

The scores flash up on the television screen, and a thousand eyes watch. "Kennedy? How did Kennedy come out?" Athlete or not, fan or not, you couldn't help but feel a sense of belonging, of identification.

As much as anything, athletes were symbols for all of you. Symbols of achievement, of determination, and certainly of pride.

Symbols, of all of them, of JFK. And you listened, you watched, and proudly did you hail your fellow students who put "Kennedy" on the TV screen.

Left: During a season of frustration and disillusionment, moments of triumph were all the more appreciated. Tom Koopman joins teammates in celebrating the team's 26-6 win over Tonka.

Below: Sweat and satisfaction roll off John Laymon's face in equal amounts after placing first against Cooper. Laymon finished third in Regions to earn a berth at State.

Left: Long before most students were even awake, girl swimmers were at school lifting weights. That regimen paid off for Barb Dutcher as she works herself into a butterfly race lead.

PRIME TIMES

Far right: Making sure the crowd stays rowdy, Mr. Spirit, Paul Spies, leads the "Give me an E-A-G-L-E-S" cheer. Win or lose, Paul was not to be denied in making the fans' presence known.

Right: Trying to beat the defending senior team in the Homecoming Pepfest annual cookie eating contest, junior Ann Jarrard stuffs already full Sandy Steinbrecher and Kathy Shannon with more wafers. Kerry Koshiol and Cathy Houle also do what they can for a junior win.

Right: The football team just scored, and there is jubilation in the stands as these girls go wild and show the spectators across the field who they think is No. 1.

Capturing the magic.

Two words. Two magical words that made all the difference between (yawn) school ... and (yeah!) S-C-H-O-O-L!

Spirit. Rather, school spirit. Whenever you went to a game or a pepfest, you saw it in action.

You saw it in the pride of the performers on the field or gym floor or stage. You saw it in the faces of the fans who willingly sacrificed their voices for victory.

But school spirit went beyond the obvious. Beyond the crowd cards waved at the command of Mr. Spirit. Beyond cookie eaters, boys who became Kolleens, or a foyer filled with signs about tonight's games.

At this school spirit meant caring enough to stand and clap while singing the school song at a pepfest. It also meant wearing a blue and gold jacket with KENNEDY on the back wherever you went.

It provided the touch of magic that made life at this school ... fun.

Above right: After all the excitement she has gone through during the week, Queen Lisa Pahl thinks she may have a strange illness. King Dave Meier checks her heartbeat for any anomalies.

Left: Though he wasn't able to play because of an injury, Andre Walton still has the desire to give all he's got. He yells his encouragement to his football teammates on the field.

PRIME TIMES

Like, who stays home on a Friday night? And don't say you did your homework. Come on, let's get real!

No one really knew just where they were going until they got there. Seeing and being seen. Finding and being found. That was the code to live by for Kennedy students on a weekend.

It's not the place, but the people, right? Wrong. Who would be caught dead at — pardon the expression — B-E-A-N-I-E-S? A sophomore? Yes. A senior or junior? Never!

Sure, you'd go almost anywhere with your pals, but ... if they were really your friends, they wouldn't drag you to White Castle. Would they?

Dates were the worst. Trying to find a cool place to go on a date was like finding a good place to park — next to impossible. A movie was the best bet. But what do you do on the second date? Well ... that's a story in itself.

Don't ask.

Wherever it was you ended up being, you had a pretty good time anyway.

Alone or with a group. Partying or parking. Kennedy kids knew where to be. And that was with other Kennedy kids.

Right: Cruisers like Michelle Vober, Blaine Stephenson, Kim Smith, Jeff Rannow, Greg Hoffman, and Michelle Morey know that an empty street and plenty of people make for a great Friday night.

Right: Juniors Kerry Koshiol and Kevin Sundem don't need the car heater to keep them warm. All they want right now is a little soft light and some ... good conversation.

Far left: Her English essay has been turned in, and the pressure is off. Now Karry Bloom can take a few minutes for a mental escape from learning.

Life never

What are you going to brag about first?

You're bound to, you know. You'll haul out your yearbook, point to this page, and then that one. To that photo, and the one over there. To that place, this group, and then that one — is that you in that crowd? Could be.

And then you'll settle into a little smile, and start your story.

None of you will tell quite the same stories, because none of you saw the year in quite the same way. Even so, you will have your own special stories to tell.

Gradually, the days of humming out over that test or that game, over the lost buddy or the unfair trade, will become a blur in your memory. Then the better times of your year will come shining through.

That's the way memory works. Happily so.

So, sit and enjoy.

Look through the pages, and let your mind drift a little. Recall the prime times of this prime year in your life.

Hey, it's OK to brag, when you've got something worth bragging about. So gather 'round some people from other schools. Tell 'em you've got your yearbook, see ... and then point out the year's state-class winners.

Make 'em jealous. Of what? Of five Merit Scholars and an NCTE national writing winner. Of two teachers Excellence in Education awards. Of two Coach of the Year awards, one for wrestling and the other for hockey.

And if that doesn't impress them, turn to sports. Be sure to talk about that weekend in February when Kennedy grabbed the headlines. Why? A Lake South boys' basketball championship, a section 5 hockey title, three individual wrestling State Champions, and JFK's second State Wrestling Team Championship.

All of that — in just 24 hours. Feels good, bragging does.

Above: They wrote state wrestling history when they won the State Class AA Championship and three individual State Championships in a single year. Finally, Coach of the Year honors. State Champions Dave Meier, Chris Lembeck, and Dan Collins join Dave Arens in celebrating the Kennedy's sweep of the gold.

Right: The hockey team's finest season ever ends as Captains Jeff Wenande and Budd Bergloff join Coach of the Year Jerry Peterson in presenting the State Tourney second-place trophy to the school.

Far right: Under the lights of the State Hockey Tourney, manager Jeff Hutterer awaits the start of finals.

PRIME TIMES

Right: Vying for the title of the world's biggest Coffioca candy eater, Jim Wise downs his 32nd box. As his habit took over his life, his locker was slowly given way to his vice.

Above: Lunchtime in the halls ... time for sophomores Kim Pankonin and Heidi Orvold to trade a little "news" (some would call it "gossip"). Lunch offered the only real break in the day for gathering with friends.

Right: These guys have what it takes. They have the right stuff. Chris Lembeck and Diego Wendt show it off.

Far right: Dressing up to be extra handsome for his date, the voluptuous Kris Herbstrieth, macho Paul Grimm finds it hard to believe that just wearing sharp clothes will get him this kind of girl.

PRIME

Left: On the twentieth anniversary of his death, Julie Delestry and Chris Tollefson gaze at the portrait of John F. Kennedy in the school foyer. It was shrouded in black in memory of his assassination on Nov. 22, 1963.

Nov. 22, 1983. The date marked the twentieth anniversary of the assassination of a President.

Of John Fitzgerald Kennedy. That President — that name — meant more to us here than it did to most.

To us, it meant blue and gold. The Eagles. Kolleens, graduation mottos, a yearbook name, and a school hymn.

It meant us.

To us, Naval officer John F. Kennedy gave the Navy's blue and gold colors, and the tune of the Navy Hymn for Kennedy's Alma Mater.

To us, President Kennedy gave the proud Eagle — our mascot, and national symbol.

To us, the Irishman gave the name of the danceline — Kolleens, pretty young lasses.

And Profiles, from the President's book, Profiles in Courage. The Torch? From the inaugural speech: "The Torch is passed to a new generation of Americans . . ."

Most importantly, John F. Kennedy gave us identity.

We identify with a President whom the community chose to honor by naming a new school in his memory.

And this year — 20 years after his assassination, — we stopped to look back to our beginnings, at the traditions that make us John F. Kennedy High School.

Nov. 22, 1963

Recalling JFK

Left: It is 20 years after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. As part of the memorial to the late President, John Kunzer and Lane Allen read about the tragic event that shocked the nation on Nov. 22, 1963.

First car date

Right: Not a first date, but this was the first time sophomore Jeff Landreth could drive the car and be alone with his date. The choice? An older, more experienced woman. A senior, Deanna Evavold.

First book read

Above: It's not his first book, really. But it's the first book to be read all the way through. That's right, every page, front to back. Scott Larson makes himself comfortable as he works his way to the end of that very first book. No, it's not for English, and not for any other class, for that matter. This hockey jock has taken on Miracle on Ice on his way to the Book-of-the-Month Club.

First car

Right: Remember the pride you felt when you backed your first set of wheels out of the garage? Unforgettable, but you hardly can compare your first trike to your first car. Karen Strom and her boyfriend, Russell Grand-Scrutton can tell you all about that.

First Prom

You never forget your first . . .

our first time? Sure. Hey, there's a first time for everything, right?

For instance, remember the first time you failed a test? Or maybe the first time you got an "A" is more memorable.

And your first overnight trip with the team . . . pillow fights, pigging out, and playing pranks were all a part of the fun.

How about that first pimple? Now, that was truly disgusting.

But, good or bad, every "first" was important. Because every "first" meant that you were growing up. Trying new things. Living new experiences. And discovering more about yourself every step of the way.

Example: You never really understood the true meaning of relief until the first time you broke curfew — but Mom and Dad were asleep when you got home, anyway.

And who could have told you how great it would feel to cash in your first paycheck — from your first job?

You had to experience it.

You — on your own.

For the first time.

It might have been scary. It might have been new. But you did it. Because there's nothing like that first-hand, first-time experience.

After all, didn't everything start . . . with a first time?

First letter

Above: The sign of accomplishment. The mark of a jock. Brian Bolander proudly shows off his varsity letter to fellow jock Julie Delestry. She appreciated her letter so much that she made sure she got a letter jacket for it right away. Brian? Not so fast. That first letter came as a freshman, but this junior didn't feel that macho compulsion to wear his sign of achievement. Enough that he had it to look at.

First real party

Left: Sure, you've been to parties. Everyone has. But have you really partied? Surrounded by the clutter of the . . . the . . . festivities, Peter Akimoto remember the night before, the night of his first real party. Somehow, he had come of age, even if he wasn't the right age for what parties often indulge in.

Nothing beats your first

The five things you like the most about school

Friends. They were your No. 1 reason for liking school. Even if you had to pay them to be seen with you, you still looked forward to being at school with the crowd.

2

Next to your buddies, you liked your classes you took in high school the best. (How about that, Mom and Dad?)

3

Next came the chance to play the game. Any game. The school was full of chances for you to participate. That was OK.

4

And if you were not participating, you were there watching. Fourth on your list were activities to go to.

5

You are foolish. Teachers ranked fifth on your hit list, and on your favorites list. Which confirms how weird you were.

Above: What did you like best about school? You got to rank your top five choices in a Profiles survey of all students. Wendy Sherman, Tina Weiser, and Sandy Zitterow are friends sharing a moment together. And that, you said, was what you liked best about coming to school

GIRLSGIRLSGIRLSGIRLSGIRL

Some work ...

Excuses. That's what life is all about. Making excuses for things that really aren't your fault anyway. At least in your eyes they aren't. So you had better learn to be a survivor. To be a liar, if you will. For some reason, teachers tend to believe:

- ☐ "I lost my contact lens," for being late for school. Teachers have terrible eyes, and they are by nature clumsy. Therefore, most of them have lost dozens of contact lenses. Just be sure that you HAVE contact lenses before you claim to have lost them. While they may have bad eyes, teachers are not stupid.
- ☐ "My black three-toed sloth ate it," for missing homework. Now you're getting it. A little creativity goes a long way with otherwise simple-minded, easily-amused faculty members.
- ☐ "Our ancient history test was given to us in Latin," as a reason for flunking a test. Your parents will be so dazzled to think you are being tested in ancient languages that they will forget that you failed.
- ☐ "I had to go to PDQ," for being late to class. This excuse is so obvious that your teacher just might accept it, giving you credit for your refreshing honesty.

Above: Standing a girl up can only lead to big trouble. That's how it is for sophomore Dan Peterson as he tries to explain the whole situation to his date, Lisa Blumke. Sitting with arms folded, back turned, and showing a feeling of disgust, Lisa, of course, has ideas of her own. His explanation? Simple. "I lost my Easy Rider bus card and I didn't have enough money so the driver wouldn't let me on." Being without a car is bad, but being without your reliable Easy Rider bus card is the pits, especially when you're a sophomore. But how can she still be mad at him after that? She just can't help but to forgive him.

Right: Afraid of the consequences if he told his dad about the accident face-to-face, John Nelson keeps his distance and phones home. Trying to sound calm and collected, but showing his scared and worried look, he begins his story! "Dad, remember the brand new car you just bought last week? Well ... it's this way. I was just driving around showing it off when all of a sudden, out of the blue, there came a big bang! Don't worry. Everything's fine. It's just the fender, the dashboard, the headlights, the engine, the windshield, the car seats. Just one more thing. Could you come down and pick me up at the junk yard?"

Left: What do you do when Mom catches you with beer cans in the back of your car? Talk your way out of it, of course. That's exactly what senior Al Moren intends to do. Mom shows her feeling of disbelief and wonders what excuse Al will use this time. Looking sheepish, he explains: "I have no idea how those got there. Somebody must have broken in and planted them there."

Left: "... The car wouldn't start and we didn't know what to do but we didn't have any money left to call home."

"... We couldn't find the house in the dark so we've just been driving around in circles."

"... Neither of us had a watch on, so we completely lost track of the time." Coming home several hours late, Jeannie and Jenny Hines try to feed Mom and Dad another line.

Below: Getting caught red-handed teepeeing, the girls (Shannon Lacey, Cari Newling, Tracy Klovstad, and Wendy Kutzler) try to talk their way out of a sticky situation. Their explanation: "We were just coming back from the supermarket when a sudden gust of wind blew this toilet paper all over the place. We were only trying to clean up the mess." Patty Dahlen watches the whole scene over Mom's shoulder, anxiously waiting for the outcome as a skeptical Mom Dahlen takes the whole situation into her own hands.

On the other hand, if life really does depend on your ability to come up with believable excuses, then your problem is that the world tends not to believe you. Face it: most of your excuses bomb.

To save you further embarrassment, Profiles has done extensive research to determine which excuses never work. Keep this list handy at all times, and avoid using:

- ☐ "I missed my bus," when you are again late for school. Your teacher probably knows you live only two blocks away and walk to school.
- ☐ "My dog ate it," for missing homework. It is a scientific fact that Bloomington dogs are upper-middle-class beasts that eat raw steak, not unfinished algebra papers.
- ☐ "My teacher hates me," when you fail a test. Although your teacher probably does hate you, he probably hates everyone else in the class, too. So did everybody fail? So what's YOUR excuse?
- ☐ "I had to go to my grandfather's funeral," for again missing class. The school keeps a list of how many grandfathers each person has. Even if your grandmothers have remarried frequently, it is doubtful that they would have 17 husbands die in a single semester.

What drives you ...

Right: Freezing on a -28 degree morning, Donna Reis and Wendy Berg again wait for their late bus.

Below: For too-short Jeff Hutterer, reaching into the top of his too-tall locker is a pet peeve.

It was like the world was out to get you. Not them, just you. Your locker jams — and you've got a test. Now! The car doesn't start, and you're due at work. Now! You discover a big juicy zit, and your date is at the door. "Ready to go?" Now! Or your teacher decides to get chummy, and his smoker's breath knocks you over. Or you get to lunch first, and everybody sits over there, and not with you. Aargh!

Teachers' side:

Try thinking like a teacher now. Adjust your bifocals, suck in your gut, and put yourself in front of a class. Now, what drives you — a teacher — looney? Try giving a fabulous lecture, only to be stopped by a knock at the door. Again. "Is there a Nick Nack in this class? I have a flower for him." Thanks, girls.

Or, the inevitable and always irritating question:

"How long does it have to be?" Content? Who cares. It's length that they worry about.

Length is no problem for students who write awful things on their desks, however. And when parents come to Open House, teachers have to explain things like, "This class ---- s," or "Black Sabbath lives," to the moms and dads. To a student, that may seem funny, but to your teacher, it's like a stake driven through his heart.

The right assets for getting ahead

This year, you were determined to be a success. In Physics? Analysis? Or French? Well, there too, if there was time left over.

Time? Left over from what?

From your undying quest for popularity.

You know . . . having the mobs seek you out because you were so incredibly, inexplicably, incomprehensibly cool. You know . . . studly, guys. Or a babe, girl.

And since most of you were not naturally molten mountains of human flesh, you had to improvise.

You had to help out Mother Nature a little. All it took were the right moves with the right assets to get you into the right social circles.

So you came to school outfitted for the fight. Dockside: always right. An Argyle sweater: great, until everybody else got one, exactly like yours. Try walking shorts 'n a sweater, girls. And, guys, an Oxford shirt, a vest, and (gasp) a tie. Ahhh . . . so right it was.

Clothes were a beginning. Then there was the car. The hair. The teeth, the smile. The words . . . the right words spoken at just the right moment . . . (dare we say it?) to just the right bombshell.

The Right Clothes

Right: This year you wanted to be flashy. This year you were going to be in style. If you stayed with the average jeans-sweater-turtleneck, well, that was fine. But this year you wanted to be vogue. Vogue like Kevin Keller and Lisa Vincent. Even though at Kennedy it really didn't matter what you wore, Kevin and Lisa wore the right clothes for turning heads . . . their way.

The Right School

The Right Words

Left: What do you really want? You know. But how do you go about getting it? Try wit. Charm. Try Jim Waters, who has both. He has a way with words. Obviously, he has managed to get a few words in with his girlfriend, Sandy Dircks ... Jim makes his offer, and Sandy? Well: "You'd like to ... what?!"

The Right Smile

Below: Some people are born with it. Others have to suffer through years of braces to get theirs. Everyone's goal is everyone's dream: a smile that will knock 'em dead. Jon Sable and Jodi Herreid have just such smiles, gifts, of course, from doting parents who were determined that their children be capable of turning heads when they walk down the halls. A smile, a look, a date. A happy parent. And a happier student.

The Right Car

Left: Every guy's dream: that perfect car. No, not that one. The one over there ... with a glossy paint job, special wheels, and chrome that blinds you in the sun. Yes, this one, right here. Tom Sendecky's car, a Camaro Z-28, will do just fine. Along the way to developing the right image for a sophisticated high school boy, Tom carefully selected — and earned the money to pay for — just the right car. And his friends' reaction? "Hey, Tom. I've gotta date tonight. What's your car doing? Would it like to go out with us?" "Everything has a price," says Tom. Especially the right car.

Le Look Ordinaire

Strictly a Class Act

Above: "Yes, Mom, it's really me. Your charming child that use to wear diapers and suck a binky. Yes, I'm in high school now, and I can actually dress myself. Sometimes I can even dress real pretty." Pretty like Michelle Gilliam and handsome like Todd Viskocil. Nobody should look that good. Should they? Well, they do. And they do it with a . . . touch of class.

The Late-Again Look

Above: Did you despise people who heard their alarm and got up the first time it went off? For Kris Stal and Dan Mullen, it was often hard to admit it was 6 a.m. Somehow it was easier to try again later. And later. And later. Until suddenly it was 7:05 — just time enough to dress and run. Skip the shower and shave, forget the comb. Get ready and look . . . natural.

from Kennedy be ordinaire?
Not usually.
Except — when it came to he fashion front. The students conformed to a style — or styles — that anged from rags to riches, ock to ... the clone zone.

John and Jane Doe

Above: Meet John and Jane Doe. Okay, don't. Meet Shari Meyer and Dave DeWall instead. Yes. Your typical high school students. They look alike. They dress alike. They take no chances. If one is seen wearing a sweater and jeans, they're all seen wearing a sweater and jeans. The John and Jane Does of the school set the standards for ... All-American students.

Zeus and Athena

Above: Could physical exertion be fun? Could changing flab into muscular masses be exciting? Could someone endure the ultimate pain? Pain Shawn Weller and Laurie Vidmar faced to get letters before they were even in high school. Sports touched every aspect of their lives. They wore their jerseys, sprinting to class, checking people into walls, just to become ... ultimate jocks.

Somebody told them to try to amaze everybody t's true. Students did dress like this in 1984. Not everyone dressed ordinaire. Some dressed fun. Even bizarre. Others dressed like 1954 or 1964. And others still, well, you know. Like they just had spring cleaning.

Mix 'n Match Mishaps

Above: Poised. Glamorous. Krista Herbstrith and Paul Grimm captured attention. Observe Paul's perfectly fitted 100 percent polyester pants. Krista's stylish walking shorts. And the look of space between their eyes. They mastered fashion with a natural ease you couldn't help but envy. This sense for style and grace brought them the honor of being JFK's No. 1 ... schmucks.

Leather and Feather

Above: Did you enjoy the sweet winter air when it was 30 below? Did you enjoy standing in the perpetual fog of east tower? Were you like Loren Davis and Anne Bugenstein who always wore their leather jackets? If so, you might have found yourself in discussions with your teachers about tardiness. Could Mother's Sweet-Little-Angel be wearing ... leather and feathers?

Le Look Extraordinaire

Urban Rockers

Above: Hum-drum and average. Words not used by Gretchen Gasterland and Peggy Schaad. They preferred being radical and dressing bizarre. If you were like them, you might have gotten sheer bliss from dying your hair red and black, or being one of the few allowed to wear a hat in front of a teacher. They were the few, the proud, the ... urban rockers.

Acute Cerebral Activists

Above: It's true. They're out there. People who smile at the thought of getting up early to go to school. Students like Leslie McCullen and Mike Haaheim, seen roaming the halls with at least 20 pounds of books and enough pencils to make their own tree. Students who spend lunch in the library memorizing the Latin dictionary. You know. Those masses of cerebral tissue ... the brains.

What kind of job do you have?

Below: "Hi, May I help you?" At just about any fast-food restaurant in town, that was the first thing you would hear. In this case, Kent Larson would be welcoming you to McDonald's. Fast-food restaurants abounded in the city and were the single-biggest employer of students. For 32 percent of Kennedy-student workers, fast-food meant fast — if not greasy — money.

Below: "Attention, Target shoppers, we have a special in aisle 8 on" And Tina Dvorak was there to help you. Retail businesses employed 20 percent of student workers, ranking second.

Below: The salad is ready. So is Dan Aul, a restaurant worker at Steak and Ale on the Bloomington hotel/motel/restaurant strip. Since the city had probably the healthiest hospitality industry in the state, it wasn't surprising that the big name places would be hiring 19 percent of working students, ranking third among Kennedy employers. Whether as waiters, buspersons, maids, or housemen, you made the bucks.

Below: Babysitting? Fun? It was for Tami Goral when she took care of her favorite charge, Jonathan Corbett. Seven percent of you counted on babysitting to give you some personal income.

FUN was No. 1! On an all-school survey of spending habits, you said you spent the most on entertainment.

SAVE? You? That's what you said. Once you made sure you were having a good time (spending what you would on good times), you said you put your next biggest chunk of money in the bank. What for? The usual. A trip during Spring Break, some new clothes . . . try a car, or maybe — just maybe — a college education.

FOOD! Food bought to eat away from home. You ranked it third on your list of have-to-haves.

PARTYING? Did you? Evidently enough of you did, for you ranked it fourth biggest expenditure for all those legal — and maybe illegal — little beverages and other things (don't ask) you needed for the weekend. Hope you had a good time. It did cost you some bucks, after all.

Where do those hard-earned bucks all seem to disappear?

The means

Below: They say a woman's work is never done. In the case of the 7 percent of students who worked for cleaning services, women's work was also men's work. Mike Landrus knew what to do with broom, for he swept his way through endless offices and halls as an employee for ABC Maintenance. Custodial jobs bounded in Bloomington's commercial office centers.

NOTHING. Fifth on your list are those things everybody else had; therefore, you had to have.

Below: Typewriters and dictaphones were nothing new to DeDe Gries. Like 4 percent of student workers, she did office work. Her employer: Western National Insurance Company.

THE CAR. When you wanted one, everybody said all your money would be sucked into it. Wrong. You said it was sixth on your list of regular expenses. All the gas, oil, insurance, repairs, and payments did not stop you from having a good time or saving a little for school. Pretty good.

Below: An easy way out? There were those who would argue the point. Even so, 18 percent of the student body luxuriated in the security of an allowance from the parents. Brent Thortinnson and his dad debate the amount that Brent thinks he can't live without, and that Dad thinks he's worth. Didya take out the garbage, Brent? Make your bed? Shovel the walk?

THE OTHER. Other? Other what? On the bottom of the list were none of the above.

hether it was saving for college, going out with your friends Friday night, or buying that just right gift for that just right person, the money had to be there.

Some took the easy way out and got their parents to supply the cash. According to the Profiles survey of the student body, 82 percent of the students did some kind of work to support their way of life.

Their jobs ranged from babysitting to secretarial work. Student workers had the same motive: to have all the things that Mom and Dad just didn't think were necessary, but students just couldn't do without.

No matter how much the schoolwork suffered, students were going to have the money — even if it did mean putting some of it in the bank for that expensive college they just had to go to.

... to many ends

Saturday, 8:00 a.m.

Above: "Bye, Mom. See ya, Dad. Have a good time. Of course, I'll be good." Glenn and Janet Oster bid farewell to their son, Kevin. Like so many other parents before them, they are leaving for the weekend, their ears filled with reassuring promises. But Kevin is no different from any other high school student. Promises are one thing, actions another.

Saturday, 11:30 p.m.

Above: Never even stopping to consider all the "fun" things they could be doing instead of keeping Kevin company, Peter Akimoto, Steve Laurent, Steve Negaard, Jeff Olson, Mike Gallagher, and Kevin Keller sacrifice their Saturday night for some tunes, a case of Coke, some munchies, and ... other assorted beverages.

Saturday, 4:30 p.m.

Above: "Say, Steve. What's going on? My parents left for the weekend, and I've got the house to myself. You want to come over? We could do some homework, or get a start on that Social Studies project, or ... (pause) we COULD have a few of the guys over. Hey ... that's a GREAT idea. After all, my parents wouldn't want me to get lonely. Come on over. Let's talk about it. Rllight."

Sunday, 2:30 p.m.

Above: What do you get when you mix a case of Coke, several varieties of munchies, too much celebrating, and a house to themselves, with seven high school boys? You guessed it:

Seven exhausted high school boys and one very large mess. Considering that they are in leftovers up to their ears, Kevin and his buddies are in for a surprise when they wake up.

Once upon a weekend

Saturday, 8:00 p.m.

Above: "Of course, you can come over. Kevin's folks are out of town this weekend and he was feeling kinda lonely and I thought it might be nice if you guys could come over and keep him company." With Steve Negaard in command, Kevin finds his loneliness disappearing. A few more phone calls and Kevin should find that he has enough people to keep him . . .

Sunday, 4:00 p.m.

Above: "Hey, Steve, why don't you get your fat butt off the couch and help me clean up this mess? My folks will be home tonight and the house looks like 'The Day After.' Besides, this party was your idea . . . I think. Think of all the things I should have done this weekend: finished my Social Studies project, read a book, been lonely. But, NO! WE HAD TO HAVE A PARTY! Now, my folks are going to be home, the house is a mess, and I haven't done my homework. But — it was fun. We'll have to do it again sometime. But next time, Steve, let's have it at your house."

'What went on all weekend?'

'Oh, nothing.'

ood story, Kevin. The parents return, you hand them a line, and they actually believe you. As long as the neighbors don't talk, you might get away with it.

Some — most — students weren't as lucky as Kevin, however. They weren't left alone in the house, free of the inhibiting forces (that is, parents) that throw cold water on party plans.

They were the students who did the usual. They went to games, did their homework, cleaned their rooms, put hours in on their jobs. They did what they were supposed to do, and they didn't get into trouble.

And — they hated the Kevins of the world who got by with murder.

Below: A streak on a mirror? Not at l'Hotel Sofitel. At least, not if Jody Thoma can help it. As a hotel maid Jody handles a variety of housekeeping duties, all for $4.95 an hour.

Right: This is her first job, and Tawny McCallum takes pride in cutting Northwest Fabric's stock just right. A three-day-a-week worker, Tawny gets minimum wage for her 15 hours per week.

Students keep it working

Why work? Why even ask the question, you say. For the 80 percent of the student body who did work, the only question they asked was "When do I work next?" And the favorite answer to just about any question was, "I can't. I'm working."

Below: The bread order is in, and Todd Koopman has to restock the shelves. For two years Todd has been working at Tom Thumb, usually on the 4 p.m. to midnight shift. Working 24 hours a week for $4 an hour, Todd serves as a cashier in addition to his stockboy responsibilities.

Above: The Scandinavian plates need straightening, and Ann German takes that on as part of her job. After working at McDonald's for four months, Ann had broken the minimum wage line.

Right: Here it is, his night to close, and Chris Jefferson has to make yet one more cream cone. When McDonald's hired him for the job, Chris moved into the working world for the first time. And, after nine months on the job, his situation was typical of so many teenagers; he was still earning only the minimum wage — $3.35 an hour — and working 20 hours a week.

"A job is a good idea if you have the time for it. It gives you needed experience and money for spending. My job does not affect my social life all that much. I still have time to do the things that I like."

— Gail Chase, a senior, works varying hours at Ragstock as a clerk.

"Everyone should get a job so they won't have to rely on parents. My job is boring to a point, but it gives me the chance to help others, and the money I earn helps out with car expenses. My job helps my social life because I get to meet so many people."

— Tim Franz, a senior, works 20-25 hours a week at Holiday Warehouse as a bagboy.

"If you want to work, a job is a good idea. I like my job, and I think it is fun getting to talk to different kinds of people. I don't work too often, so it doesn't affect my social life. The money I get I spend on clothes and entertainment."

— Nancy Arndt, a junior, works 12 hours a week at Montgomery Wards as a cashier and on the floor.

"I like my job. It is good for me. With the money I earn, I am able to do the things that I want to do. It doesn't take up a lot of my time so it doesn't affect my social life too much."

— Greg Hoffman, a junior, works 15-20 hours a week at Bridgeman's as a cook.

"I need to work because I need the money. Because I work full-time, my job cuts into my social time. My job is OK. If you have the time for a job, you should get one."

— Joan Cote, a sophomore, works 40 hours a week at Ponderosa taking orders.

"Having an AFS student in our home is enjoyable. I think it's neat to hear about Norway and the differences between the European countries and our country. We get along pretty well. Actually, we're like sisters. We can talk to each other and trust each other. My family was right when they decided it might be a good experience for all of us to bring an exchange student into our home."

— Heidi Jahnke has Kirsti Ward in her home as an exchange student.

"Nursing home work is one thing I really enjoy. My work includes visiting with the residents, running errands for the staff, doing paper work for the Red Cross and helping at parties. I like working with people and it gives me a sense of responsibility. I do volunteering because it's fun and it is a chance to do some community service. I'm glad I made the decision to volunteer."

— Beth Kingdom works as a blue striper at Bloomington Maple Manor 2-3 hours a week.

"Coaching gives me a chance to teach younger kids to swim. I really like it. Also, it gives me a chance to stay around swimming even though I am no longer swimming. I plan to coach in the future, and if I volunteer for the club for a certain amount of time, I will receive a paid position. So, volunteering helps me out in planning my future."

— Mary Ann VonEschen coaches beginning competitive swimming 3 days a week.

"I love what I'm doing, and it's something I have always wanted to do. The rewards of volunteering are wonderful. I don't get paid for it in money, but the benefits and satisfaction are worth more to me than the money ever could be. Society should try to understand that these people have feelings and need a friend and someone who cares just like any other person does."

— Karen Batchelder works with learning disabled students in the District 287 program 1 hour each day.

"Being a Junior Volunteer is something I really enjoy. I meet new people and get experience working with strangers. I volunteered to see what the medical field was like. My job consists of running errands for the nurses and patients, delivering flowers, and talking to the patients. I get along well with the other volunteers and the staff at the hospital. Hopefully, this experience will help me in my future."

experience. One of the most valuable ways to learn something is by doing. You've heard the saying, "Learning by doing." At this school, this was no idle statement, for 1779 students took practical courses that prepared them for a vo-tech course or for an entry-level job.

Business courses attracted about 880 students who worked with up-to-date equipment as they worked to gain the experience that would "help them to get a better job," says Kay Gould, business teacher.

When applying for jobs, students could boast of typing, shorthand, word processing, and accounting skills.

"Developing life skills" was a major goal in Home Economics courses, says teacher Sue Winter. These skills "will be used day in and day out for success and comfort in their lives and the lives of those whom these students will touch," says Winter.

Personal use and vocational application of Industrial Arts skills made those courses attractive to about 660 students. "Apprentice programs and on-the-job training are common," says teacher Guy Blessing.

All students had to have was a little experience, experience that would give them an "in" on the future.

his own

Goethe was right. The German poet understood that "he who is ignorant of foreign language knows not his own." Goethe understood that education involves the mastery of all the "foreign" languages that, together, form the structure of an educated society. And, Goethe understood that any language is not foreign to those who can speak it.

Most obvious of what are considered "foreign" languages are those spoken in other countries. Like French, and German. Spanish and Norwegian. Those four languages all were in the school curriculum.

Not so obvious, however, are the specialized languages that one needs to master in order to function in just about any of the other academic areas.

Like the sciences. Physics. Biology. Chemistry. And Psychology. Whatever the field, students had to be able to "speak" the language of the area if they meant to work in it.

That meant coming to grips with terms, terms that were the heart of the principles or axioms that led to solutions.

Art, meanwhile, is more language of the mind, with creation taking the place of words. Art students learned to create with their drawings, paintings, and sculptures.

Music? You sing it, or you play it, but only after you can read it. Reading music in the school's choirs, band, or orchestra involved skill; performing it became an art in which a "foreign" language again became understandable.

So much for the sciences, art, and music. But how did students communicate with computers? Computer languages are many, and at Kennedy computers were programmed in a language called BASIC (Beginners' All-purpose Symbolic Instructional Code).

For anyone to do anything at all on the computer, first he had to learn that basic BASIC language.

And English? Was English a foreign language? Not for most students, in spite of what their English teachers thought when they graded essays. It was foreign, however, to the approximately 80 students in the ESL (English as a Second Language) program.

Whether emigrants or exchange students, these people were studying a language that was not native to their families. It truly was foreign to them . . . foreign, that is, until that moment of revelation when they realized that they were thinking in it.

And when that happened to students in any subject area, they knew they had arrived.

They had power.

How do you get to McDonald's? Like, I mean, man, I'm starved. My gut's achin'. I'm having a Big Mac attack. Let's cruise.

Power comes with words

T echnology. Scary stuff, especially in 1984. Visions of TV's watching you. Computers controlling your life. Creativity lost.

To some people, technology was a weapon. It was something used to extract. Used to gain leverage. Used to give someone an advantage.

And that's true. Somewhat. Students learned to use technology as a weapon.

They extracted knowledge, gained intelligence, and took the technological advantage.

Even so, students did not lose creativity. Art teacher Dick Green made sure of that. He taught use of computer graphics as an art form and showed students how to give their paintings a futuristic look by using an air brush. Such skills put students at a technological advantage when pursuing careers in commercial art.

Perhaps it was in science that students benefitted the most from high tech activities. Physics classes used an electric eye for exact data when calculating the acceleration due to gravity. Video cameras also were used to slow down reactions that ordinarily take place in seconds.

Computers also served to ease the stress of problem solving in chemistry as well as physics.

High-tech applications even found their way into such classes as home economics, proving to be especially helpful in career units.

Gaining an advantage in the marketplace was the goal of business students as they turned to high tech in droves. Word processors went a big step beyond typewriters in saving time, energy, and, of course, frustration.

High tech equipment found its way into Audio Visual, as well, as students learned to operate videotaping and editing machines. They could mix soundtracks, produce TV shows, and even star themselves on the tube.

They weren't frightened by high tech. In fact, few students were, once they found out the possibilities provided by it.

Why make it 'required'?

Iwonder why I am taking this course. What good is it? Why am I in this class? Did you ever say that about a course? Of course you did, and usually about a required course.

Somebody else, like the State Board of Education and the local School Board, decided you had to take three years of social studies and English, and a year of phys. ed. and health. But why?

Yes, Lois Fennig, Social Studies area leader, why? Because, she says, "Our system of democratic government is dependent upon popular rule and respect for each individual. You need to learn how to make decisions about public issues." As in voting. Got it?

OK, you could see some sense in that.

But English? It "teaches students to think independently, logically, and critically," claims Susan Tasa, English area leader.

That sounded good. After all, you would be doing a little speaking and reading and writing now and then after graduation. Required courses, then, taught things required of you for daily living.

So maybe if they were not required, you might have chosen to take these classes . . . because they were important and were good for you.

Above: Pains-taking research is what Patricia Wodnick finds it takes to write a good term paper. In senior English, this was the one assignment most dreaded by the students.

Ann DeLaHunt: "I think Kennedy has a really good atmosphere for learning. It is easy for students to become involved in their education, and many do. However, many people still can participate in other areas of high school life. At some other high schools the students are involved in either sports or some non-academic activity or they are good students. For them it is one or the other, but at Kennedy you can be both."

Heidi Gaukel: "The most important factor in my education here has been the friendly support of my teachers. I really have appreciated this support from Mr. Jaskowski, Ms. Swisher, Mr. Westrom, Mr. Seibold and Mr. Bjork. They encouraged me to learn and explore and question—not merely to accept what others have told me. They made me aware of my strengths and encouraged me to better my weaknesses. I also enjoyed the chance to grow musically through band and chorus."

Jean Hudson: "I think the teachers make school worthwhile. Teachers like Ms. Swisher, Mr. Kuzma, and Mr. St. Martin challenged me (something few teachers do around here). They gave me the incentive to work harder. They pushed me to develop my potential. The homework that they assigned was not just busy work; it was something more. The homework was designed to teach me something. I could learn from the homework they gave me."

Mona Ibrahim: "I am a highly motivated person. I strive to achieve for my own personal satisfaction. I appreciate the teachers who have created courses that are challenging and interesting. Like Cliff Severson in American Studies, and Blake Jaskowski in Continuous Algebra II, and Clance Swisher in 12th grade A.P. English. I also like the fun learning atmosphere created by the students around me."

Barb Jaeger: "Teachers at Kennedy have not just taught facts. They have taught me how to think and reason for myself. Anyone can memorize facts and figures, but only an educated person can analyze and apply them. Teachers here treat each person individually and understand their personal needs. I miss quite a bit of school, and most of my teachers have been very understanding and helpful."

Martha Nelson: "There is a stimulating atmosphere at Kennedy which has made studying and working more interesting and more of a challenge. I appreciate the chance to actively participate in athletics and the recognition that goes along with it. There is a broad variety of interests here which take some of the pressure off academic success or failure. There is a place for everyone to fit into some facet of life at Kennedy."

Kevin Park: "The major reason for my academic success is the existence of classes where a group of intelligent students can be taught by excellent teachers. Such classes have contributed the most to my educational success and have been the things that I appreciated most about my education. Also contributing to my education are classes that only small groups are qualified to take, such as Calculus and German IV. The offering of such classes is a major factor in making my education a good one."

Kim Posch: "The most vital factor in the success of my education has been motivation from myself, my family, and my teachers. It's really great when you have the support of others to help you through the difficult times. That is why my friends and teachers have been so important. I must have questioned them more than they could stand, but I feel that working together strengthens our friendships. More than anything I value all the great friends that I've made in high school, especially at Kennedy."

Eric Voth: "An important factor in my education is the motivation that came when teachers made me work for A's; parents are pleased with good grades, students' test scores being better than mine, and my wanting to improve. The thing I appreciate about my education is that this motivation is present; motivation and endless work makes an education a success. My education is just beginning, and I am glad that motivation has given me a good start."

Mike Walsh: "The most important factor to a successful education is effort. I put in a great deal of time doing homework. Closely behind would have to be the superior quality of the teachers. The thing I appreciate most about my education is the chance to take the subjects I like; there is such a wide range of classes. The entire faculty is very supportive of both academic and athletic areas. If I ever have trouble understanding a topic, the instructor won't hesitate to spend extra time with me."

Of what value?

It was registration time, and you had all those hours to fill up with something other than Study Hall.

There were so many choices—hundreds, in fact, in that huge course registration booklet. So how were you supposed to know which classes you should take? What did you need to take?

Your choice depended heavily on what you were going to do after you graduated. Was college in your future? Then by the time you got there, you had better have college-preparatory classes in your past, courses like math, a few sciences, World Studies, College-Prep English, and maybe a foreign language.

Or were you headed to a vocational institute, or even right into a full-time job? Then your schedule probably was filled with business, industrial arts, or maybe home economics courses.

Sometimes, of course, arguments could be made for courses that prepared you for daily living, regardless of post-graduation school or job plans. Math, for instance, was one of those, claims teacher

Blake Jaskowiak. "Math teaches you logical thought processes for reaching logical solutions," he said. And that should serve you well anywhere, was the message.

"Making you think," was a major goal in chemistry too, says teacher Harvey Westrom. And George Drier argued that after taking Physics, students "have a greater understanding of the physical world in which they live. They will contribute to and participate more in the technical society."

Pointing out that students who took a foreign language scored consistently higher on SAT college board exams, French, German, Spanish, and Norwegian teachers made a valid case for taking a language.

Not only so they learn a different language, but they also learn to communicate more effectively in English because of their intensive grammar studies. And, says Spanish teacher Peggy Turnwall, they gain "a better understanding of the world, politically and culturally." Adds French teacher Linda Lee, "The point is to broaden outlooks and to widen horizons for college-bound students."

If you were headed for a vocational program or directly into a job, you had little trouble finding appropriate courses to take.

Try industrial arts, where courses ranging from Drafting to Woods, Auto Mechanics to Printing, helped give you hands-on experience. Such courses also would be valuable in the future when you would have a car or a house to take care of. And, says Metals teacher Bob Ginn, these courses taught you "to work better with others."

Business courses were highly popular with vocation-minded students. Up-to-date technical equipment and skilled teachers were available to help prepare students for positions in business. If you were going to look for a job, a little work in Office Procedures, Accounting, Shorthand, Typing, and Business Law were good to have on your record.

College or work aside, some courses were just plain good for you. They would help to complete your personality. Like art. While some art students did go on to further schooling in the field, the courses were good for any student, for "people need something for the spirit as well as the pocket book," says Duane Hoecherl, art teacher.

Home Economics electives, like Cooking, Sewing, or Child Development, also were courses that were useable for anybody. Like so many courses in Kennedy's comprehensive program, they were designed to help meet broad needs you would face in modern society.

The problem was only one of choice, which of the electives offered were the ones you needed for your future, and which you wanted for your personality. With all there was to take here, it was a wonder that anybody ever chose to take something as useless as Study Hall.

Above: "C'est moi!" says Laurel Erwin to fellow French student Xuan Pham during a dialogue. In their dialogue they talked about movies which they were planning to watch soon.

Exercises like these were used in language classes to improve fluency. For these students, learning a foreign language will increase their communication skills.

More than most

Standing out in the crowd made them work even harder to accomplish their goals.

People with dedication.

Dedication to academics.

These six were willing to dedicate their time and effort more than most.

Time.

Time to research, study, and learn the basics. To learn them well.

Effort.

Effort that resulted in different merit for different people.

For Mona Ibrahim, effort resulted in award-winning writing. Her poetry won her first place in the National Council of Teachers of English Writing Contest.

Merit.

Merit finalists. Some students just got things done. Lars Erickson, Jean Hudson, Eric Johnson, Peggy Ostrander, and Eric Voth went beyond usual limits to become PSAT Merit Scholarship finalists.

The PSAT, given during the junior year, let these five talented people prove that they did much more than most.

Right: Thanks to many long hours of practice, Peggy Ostrander's talent shines through all her performances.

Below: Researching an essay for English seems to be a daily part of life for Lars Erickson. Many students use Kennedy's all-purpose MRC to do their homework, research, and of course, English essays.

Left: A complex math problem proves to be a challenge for Eric Voth, whose concentration shows the intensity with which he pursues an answer. Higher mathematics challenged even the best of Kennedy's students.

Special Events

Right: Queen Lisa Pahl offers a royal chariot (some would call it a golf cart) shuttle service, this time bringing Senior Royalty member Hope Howard across the field and to the stands for the football game.

Below: "Dancin' in Heaven" was the Prom theme, and these couples give the theme its fullest meaning as they shuffle in each other's fond embrace. The spring event drew 1,000 students from Kennedy and Jefferson.

Right: She set her sights on her man, and Sadie Hawkins gave her the excuse she needed to catch him. Susan Palmersheim hangs onto her Lil' Abner, Tom Paulson, waiting for him to make the next move.

Below: After waiting patiently in a long line, Dave Beck and Marla Manning finally reach the big moment. Marryin' Sam makes their dreams come true as Dave and Marla exchange their marriage vows and rings.

Good old country fun was brought to life this year in the form of the Sadie Hawkins dance.

Sadie was a chance for the Daisy Maes to go after their Lil Abners. The gals worried about their guys, while the guys worried about having fun.

At the Kolleen-sponsored dance the live band "Branded" provided country-western music for dancing.

There were the traditional Sadie events, like getting 10-cent warrants to send friends to jail where a kiss from their sweetie was used as bail.

Waiting in long lines did not seem like a big price to pay for the reward of Marryin' Sam performing their wedding ceremony. After that, the newlyweds visited the Honeymoon Hotel.

What that entailed is best left to memory. Or imagination.

Right: Athletic traditions come into play as Missy Matthews and Barb Peters provide a color guard.

Right: Crowns and smiles tell a story of Homecoming 1983 for Queen Lisa Pahl and King Dave Meier.

Coronation carries on tradition A most special time

Kind of magic, it was. Just as it has been for each of the 19 years that the school's tradition-locked Homecoming coronation has taken center stage. It was the first special event of the year. Come to think of it, it was the most special, special event of the year, as well.

It was, well . . . magic.

The scene itself forced a hush from students, parents, and members of the community. Used again was the same elaborated staging and decoration that always have meant "Homecoming" at this school, complete with dazzling tinsel and brilliant flowers, patriotic music, pomp, ceremony, and just enough suspense to make the show worth remembering.

Over 500 students again brought the original Kennedy script back to life. Twenty years after President Kennedy's assassination, his words seemed to carry a special meaning in a school named because of him.

The climax came early in the program when last year's queen, Jean Dagendesh, returned to supervise the changing of robes and crowns, now to be worn by Queen Lisa Pahl and King Dave Meier.

Then came Lisa and Dave's royal walk to greet their classmates, more music, much more applause, perhaps some tears. An aura of excitement.

The magic was there.

Below: A king is chosen, and Dave Meier steps forward to find his robe and crown. Turning to

Left: No other moment in her life will ever match it. Having lived through the tensions of Homecoming Coronation introductions, Lisa Pahl now takes on the emotions that go with being a queen. Sharing the moment with her are two of her fellow candidates, Barb Brasket and Hope Howard.

The pride of an Eagle

Homecoming magic

You were there. You saw it. And chances are very good that you were a part of it. That's the way it works at this school at Homecoming time.

If you were new to the school, you probably could not believe what you were seeing — and doing. But if you had been a student here before you weren't surprised. The Homecoming you saw this fall was just what you expected — knew — it would be.

With the magic of Coronation over, you got into rowdier things. Like going crazy when your new king and queen addressed the student body at the Homecoming Pepfest. Like screaming and dancing with the JB Singers during rock 'n roll numbers. Like supporting your class' cookie eaters (seniors proved to have the biggest mouths and stomachs) as Oreos disappeared in record numbers.

As you witnessed the crazy pandemonium that was Kennedy High School during those moments, you couldn't help but feel pride in the air.

Pride was what King Dave Meier talked about, as well, when he reminded students that he had started high school at Lincoln. And now — he couldn't be prouder than to be at Kennedy.

And you were there.

Right: Blink! and you're back into the '50s at the Spirit Week Pepfest. With his hair greased down just right, Dave Meier twirls his Kolleen dance partner, Jill Olson, during a special dance number. Jocks were pressed into dance duty with the Kolleens for this special Spirit Week feature.

Below: Obviously, their view of the '50s was that everyone was a geek. Mike Gallagher proves that even a nerd can prove to be appealing to a balloon-body dud like Bernadine Haack.

off the offensive attack of the Barbarians' Dave Fuecker. The game ended in a 3-3 tie.

Then again, when you have so many reasons for your spirit, you've just got to make it known.

And that you did. By participating in the games and contests. By dressing up ...

Even Leander Longfellow (Paul Stanko) cannot believe it when Faith Hogue (Dani Kaslow) reveals that Purity Dean (Marla Manning) is in fact her long-lost sister. Purity herself can hardly believe it; how could anyone else?

Right: Boos and hisses echo through out the auditorium as the audience participates in the time-honored tradition of booing the evil-hearted villain. Imogene Pickens (Tarita Tacey) and the audience watch closely as events unfold. The auditorium now fills with cheers and gleeful shouts as the hero, Leander Longfellow (Paul Stanko), threatens the evil Frothingham to save his lady-fair, Purity Dean (Marla Manning). The wide-eyed heroine, Purity Dean, struggles violently as the terrible villain tries to sweep her off of her feet, but to no avail until the hero steps in.

Left: A few hours later, and what a change. Having shed their caps and gowns, new alumni Kris Eggen and Brett Looney put aside Graduation emotions in favor of a little Senior Party Blackjack.

The end of school. Four years of effort climaxes on a single day. Graduation. And it's great to be a graduate . . . free, independent. But what about your friends? They were your life during these years. But now — that's over, and you'll never see many of them again.

On with life, and responsibility. Gone is the secure routine, gone is a special period in your life, a time that can never exist in quite the same way again.

With that in mind, seniors especially realized the importance of end-of-the-year activities. Like Prom, and all the preparations for it: getting the money, being formal, feeling nervous. And asking that special person for an unforgettable evening.

Then Graduation. The big day. Four years of waiting, preparing, and testing brought you to that moment of recognition, of receiving that Kennedy diploma as you walked across the Met Center stage in front of 5,000 people.

After the tensions of that ceremony, it was good to relax — one more time — with your friends. Your classmates. The Senior Party provided that opportunity where, all night, you could have fun, win prizes, eat, and celebrate.

And when the party was over, you left. Your friends left. No longer were you Kennedy students. You had become graduates. Alumni. This time it was tough to leave Kennedy. But maybe in your next life you won't have to get up so early.

They weren't just ordinary students, and they weren't about to be overlooked.

In fact, the school's four foreign exchange students involved themselves so heavily in school activities that hundreds of students had a chance to get to know something about what people think in places beyond the USA.

AFS brought Tarita Tacey and Enrique Rozas here from Australia and Peru, respectively. Here from Sweden with the American-Scandinavian Student Exchange was Henrik Hojer. From Norway with the American-Scandinavian Intercultural Exchange was Kirsti Ward.

An exchange of a more unusual sort occurred when Praonphan Pan-Nau came here from Thailand as an AFS exchange teacher.

Then, too, two Kennedy students were abroad, John Robinson in Venezuela, and Jackie Morell in Peru.

"This year abroad has been so incredibly good for us," says Tarita. "I just wish more Kennedy students could do what we have done."

Friendly foreigners

Teaching in America was a study in contrasts for Praonphan Pan-Nau from Thailand. Here for a semester as an exchange teacher in the AFS program, Pan-Nau was overwhelmed by the friendliness of people at Kennedy. "Everyone showed me much kindness," she says. Since the Thai culture is very conservative, Pan-Nau was surprised at some of what she found here.

"Female teachers in Thailand are not allowed to wear trousers to school, and men may not wear jeans. Students wear uniforms to school, too," she says.

In Thailand, she teaches English as a foreign language. At Kennedy, Pan-Nau taught in the English as a Second Language program, working specially with Asian-born students. She hopes friends will write to her.

Henrik Hojer

While arguing that school in Sweden is "harder, with more work and more thinking," Henrik Hojer nevertheless concedes that "school activities are so much better here. School in Sweden is for learning only," says Henrik.

Even though he found school to be easier here, Henrik still praised "the large variety of classes. The school system is very fair, and there are classes here for everybody," said Henrik.

Teachers, too, were good. "They enjoy their job, and they take time to work with students beyond classtime. They make students feel like they are their friends," he says. In fact, "everybody was really friendly here. Students welcomed me and made me feel accepted immediately."

That acceptance led to Henrik becoming an integral member of the Profiles staff and a member of the soccer and tennis teams. He also played intramural soccer and volleyball during the winter.

"People think of hamburgers, big steaks, and skyscrapers when they think of America. I have found more hamburgers than I expected, but not so many steaks or skyscrapers," he says.

Henrik, who is on the American-Scandinavian Student Exchange, is looking forward to returning to Swedish food. But when he leaves here he "will miss the school sports, the extra activities, and especially my great host family and Kennedy friends. I may even miss volleyball at 6:30 a.m."

And, so he won't miss people too much, he wants them to write:

Enrique Rozas

Enrique Rozas is one of those rare individuals who thought Minnesota snow was wonderful, so wonderful, in fact, that he said he was sad to see it melt.

At Kennedy, this Peruvian used the nickname of Quique. He spent the year here as a part of the American Field Service program.

At first, he was overwhelmed with the size of Kennedy. "There are so many facilities, sports, and activities for students to participate in," says Quique.

"Kennedy is five times bigger than my school. School in Peru is much more militant, and we even have to wear uniforms," he says.

He greatly enjoyed Kennedy activities and special events, like Homecoming. The festivity of Coronation delighted him, for he had never seen such a sight.

Quique says he loves the United States, and he knows he "will return, because I have a wonderful host family and friends. I would like to return and experience all the same great moments that I am enjoying now," he says.

In addition to mastering a new language — English — Quique says he appreciated learning about a different culture, including a new way of life with his host family and friends. "This has been a growing experience for me," says Quique.

"I will miss my family, friends, hockey games, and of course the wonderful Kennedy High School. I have been so happy here."

Remember me, and write:

VISAS

Above: Australia's Tarita Tacey with her host parents, Maryann and William Noleen, host sister

Susie, and pet Cola. Family life in America was a very important aspect of Tarita's year.

Tarita Tacey

Having attended a private all-girl school in her native Australia,
Tarita Tacey quickly — and happily — adapted to a co-ed public high school. "At first, it was strange seeing boys and being classmates with them, but now it seems natural," she says.

"Kennedy is the greatest school, and I never felt homesick when I was at school. It gave me a sense of security," she says.
"My friends always made me feel at home. The atmosphere at Kennedy is full of friendship."

Tarita loved talking about her favorite subject, Australia. Often she was answering seemingly preposterous questions, like:
"Do you find dead koalas in your pool?" "do you live in houses?"
She found such questions to be "hilarious, and they show just how important it is to have exchange students so we can learn more about other societies."

Tarita comes from a beach resort called the Gold Coast. "It is a replica of Hawaii," she says.
Tarita says she became an American Field Service student because she "wanted adventure.
I wanted a new challenge, and I was looking for excitement. I definitely feel I have experienced all three at Kennedy."

Tarita took advantage of Kennedy activity offerings, getting involved in drama, choir, the speech team, KTAV, and the yearbook staff.

"Kennedy will always be a part of my life," she says.

Kirsti Ward

Without a doubt, this has been the very greatest year of my life," says Kirsti Ward,
a Norwegian

exchange student here for a year on the American-Scandinavian Intercultural Exchange program.

Kirsti found pleasure and friends by getting active in soccer, cross country running, and cross country skiing. She also worked on the yearbook staff.

Those activities, she says, helped to make her year very enjoyable. "Kennedy has a lot of really nice students. I really mean it," she says. "There is almost a family-type relationship between the students."

How difficult was it to adjust to life in America? "I didn't have any problems at all," says Kirsti. "It was just different to have such nice warm weather for such a long time in the fall, and to have air-conditioned houses. At home in Norway, we do not need such things," she says.

As with the other exchange students, Kirsti found classes generally to be easier than in Norway, but she also appreciated the social aspects of school that are not a part of Norwegian education. "Here, you teach students to work together, to cooperate, to be productive in groups. We don't do that so much," says Kirsti.

She says she will definitely return to the USA again. "I'm going to miss everyone so much," she says. She asks her friends

Style shows talent, work JB's prove excellence onsistency.

That's what the JB's were all about.

The group was excellent.

And that excellence was the result of hard work, commitment to rehearsals, and concentration on consistency in performing.

Director James Bontrager stressed "learning to think when they were on their feet." He was the first to recognize special qualities necessary for a performer in a specialized singing group. Voice was one thing, but the ability to move on the stage with ease and style also was vital.

"Dependability, good moves, and confidence" were cited by Mike Urban, student director, as being essential ingredients in good shows. The JB's had about 100 chances to prove that they possessed those qualities this year during a long schedule of performances for crowds that sometimes numbered over a thousand people.

Singer Tim Brewer, who became famous for his rock 'n roll number, named the group's shows at the Carlton Room, St. Paul Civic Center, and the Minneapolis Auditorium as being the most significant. There, the crowds were huge, the excitement overpowering, the satisfaction incredible.

It was at such shows that the JB's proved their professionalism. Bontrager praised the confidence of the 40 performers as they went through their routines, music that ranged from Country to Rock, from Ragtime to sentimental ballads that would evoke special emotions from audiences of all ages.

Bontrager emphasized that "these kids had a lot of confidence." They knew what they liked, what they were good at, and how to get an audience involved.

Tradition? It ran deep in this prestigious group, but it wasn't an inhibitor. Rather, it was a challenge, for the JB's focused not on what previous groups had done, but on what they themselves would add to JB history. "If we were good, it was because Mr. Bontrager believed in us," says senior Greg Walsh.

Right: "Great Balls of Fire!"
The song comes alive during Todd Johnson's solo number.

Choirs' glory Same old story

ear after year, the story is the same. Audiences crowd into the auditorium, anxious to see the Holiday Show. Not just any school's program, the Kennedy production.

Reputation, you see.

The crowds knew that they would see about 400 students go through a myriad of costume and scene changes. Popular music blended with holiday carols made an emotional show.

The choir's quality was seen earlier in the fall at the Homecoming Coronation, where patriotic music helped develop spirit.

Then, too, there was the program of tribute to President Kennedy on the twentieth anniversary of his death, Nov. 22.

Jeff Lanenberg accompanied a slide presentation about the assassinated president.

Audience reactions at those performances also were enthusiastic. And even though they've heard the applause before, year after year, the choirs never tire of it.

Captivating choirs

Orchestra finishes at its finest

and other orchestra members provided accompaniment for the choir at the school's memorial to JFK. The orchestra was a part of the program that commemorated the anniversary of Kennedy's death.

Every year since the school opened, orchestra at Kennedy has been synonymous with John Dennis.

He began the program here in 1965 and has been around to nurture and sustain it ever since. He has guided hundreds of string musicians through the music program, teaching attitudes as well as skills.

An era in Kennedy music comes to a close at this June's Graduation, however, for that performance will be the last for a Dennis-directed orchestra. After 36 years in teaching, including 23 in Bloomington, John Dennis will retire as the school year ends.

While the Kennedy Orchestra has lacked in numbers of participants, the group still has been "one of the most talented groups, ever," claims Dennis. Taking on steadily more difficult musical challenges as they moved through a series of concert dates, the group pleased audiences from Homecoming Coronation to the Holiday Show and on through a concert pianist's opening at the Decathlon Club.

Satisfied with his career as a teacher and as a private performer, Dennis claims he "would have done nothing differently." Nineteen years of Kennedy audiences have benefitted because of his dedication to his work.

As the school's orchestra moves into a different era, it will take some getting-used-to for students to adjust to an orchestra without John Dennis in front of it.

Above: Coronation would follow that afternoon, but first Julie Fautch, Judy Willet, Becky Blake, Lori Love, Heidi Christian, and Katina Hansen get in some serious practice of Concert Choir music.

Musicians shine

Left: "Tell Her About It." In fact, Marty Kragness, Greg Walsh, John Laymon, Chris Nordby, Sean Pritchard, Jim Johnson, Rajesh Dash, Sawn Olson, Mike Haaheim, and Todd Johnson are telling everybody about it. When "PM Magazine" came to JFK this fall, these guys had the chance to let their talent shine through.

Below: Santa's helpers, Patty Halpin, Jodi Halverson, and Ginger Domsten show that it pays to be good.

Florida or bust. Indeed, that's what kept choir members motivated as they rehearsed through the winter. During spring vacation the group performed at Sea World, Disney World, at a USO show, for an Orlando high school, and before a convention of 7,900 interior decorators during a tour of Florida.

Choir members had only one fund raiser this year to help push for the $388 that it would cost each traveler.

According to choir member Todd Johnson, the trip was worth taking because it "gave the group unity." Enjoyable as traveling was, Todd says the important thing about choir was "the experience and the togetherness" members came to feel through performing.

Choir performs with sunny style

Bands beat the blues

Searching for the right interaction between students made up for a trying, if not difficult, year for the bands. Again working with a different director, band students faced a period of adjusting to a new style of direction and organization.

Steve Olsen came to Kennedy from Rosemount to take over the program. His goal: to create a positive image for the 90-member Marching Band, which was later divided into the Varsity and Concert bands.

Audiences for the bands most often came in the form of athletic fans; the Marching Band played for all home football games, and the Pep Band was at winter hockey, basketball, and wrestling contests.

While many students found it difficult to adjust to Olsen's ways of running the program, most recognized that their problem was with change, and not with any person. By the time the winter concert season was underway, problems had largely faded. Band members produced solid music, made friends, and interacted with a new leader with new ideas.

Above: Waiting for their cue, percussionists Mike Haaheim, Paul Stanko, Eric Ernst, Eric Mortenson, and Peggy Ostrander anticipate the next band movement.

The Billy Joel sequence was chosen by CBS to be viewed nationally.

Destination: Colorado Springs and the Pike's Peak Music Festival. For 80 anxious band members, that's what helped to motivate them as they rehearsed their way through long spring weeks leading up to the May trip.

Part of the fun was staying in the Holiday Inn Central where facilities helped make for good times.

In addition to competing at the festival, band members enjoyed the Colorado mountains, stopping at the Cave of the Winds and the Garden of the Gods.

Long before the trip, those same musicians were salespersons, selling fruit and pizzas to help finance the trip. Sales helped to cover the $200-per-person expenses. Band parents worked with Director Steve Olsen to be sure the money was ready, trip arrangements were just right, and the band members themselves fully prepared to perform.

While the festival gave the band a chance to prove their level of accomplishment, it also served as a unifying factor for the group. Band members solidified friendships and developed stronger group loyalties.

hat makes a Kolleen? Start with legs, of course, and a good smile. "Then add hard work, long hours, and dedication," says Katie McChesney, co-captain.

And emphasize the dedication part. For 24 girls to perform at home football games, pepfests, and some winter sports events, it took dedication to daily practices and a willingness to learn new steps, new movements.

The line's tight coordination and precision movements earned them enthusiastic applause.

"That's what made it worth all the effort," says Co-Captain Pat Wodnick.

After finishing fifth out of 17 lines at the Norwood Central Competition, and sixth out of 15 at the Apple Valley Invitational, the girls were confident when they entered the State Danceline Contest.

Even though they felt they had danced exceptionally well in the preliminaries, the line failed to place in the top nine, thus eliminating the girls from the final competition.

So it was that sometimes, being a Kolleen meant more than dedication. More than smiles, style, and hard work. Sometimes it also meant frustration.

Above: Caught up in the emotion of the moment as the wrestlers struggle with Apple Valley, Barb Brasket, Lori Petersen, Kathy Halvorson, and Michelle Partridge intensify their sideline support.

W e've got spirit, yes we do. We've got spirit, how about you?" At every game, 18 girls dedicated to the propagation of spirit asked that question of opposing teams' fans. From football to wrestling and everything in between, the cheerleaders were always there, even when "always" meant three games a week.

And being there wasn't always easy. Time had to be found to sell flowers or candy, to prepare for pepfests, to practice new cheers, to put on the '50s Dance, and — was there still time? — to do homework.

The girls attributed much of their positive attitude to Advisor Pat Fatchett. It was with good reason that they called her "Mom." She worked to solve every problem, and she had spirit. The girls had spirit. And because of them, fans at games had spirit, too.

Enthusiasm abounds

Unity builds friendships for eager sophomore cheerleaders

Meeting a challenge

High school began early for 10 girls. Picked for the new sophomore cheerleading squad while still at Oak Grove, these girls began the high school experience early — and in depth. Their three-a-week cheering duties soon turned them into fast friends. "It was like having another family," said Captain Amy Thompson. Involved as they were, these "new kids" on the block soon were part of the regular school scene.

Just for the fun of it

Just for fun, and why not? Why not get together with your friends, play a little ball, share some laughs, have a good time?

That prospect attracted about 300 would-be, should-be, or have-been jocks in various states of physical disrepair out for intramural sports.

About 80 students formed IM indoor soccer teams. Says Coach Jim Klaseus, "It gave kids a chance to participate with no pressure and no conditioning." They could just relax and have a good time hacking each other around the floor.

Coach Ron Johnson coordinated the program's most popular offering, IM broomball. So many students, in fact, were attracted to broomball that two leagues were formed to accommodate the 14 teams and 150 players.

Johnson also worked with volleyball, a 6:30-in-the-morning offering that caused six teams and 40 students to drag themselves out of bed for the competition.

"Intramurals are not a win-at-all-costs situation," says Johnson. "Students enjoy friendly competition and good clean physical exercise," he says.

Also a part of the informal winter sports was the Ski Club program. About 60 students got a break on lift tickets at Buck Hill Wednesdays. Again the attraction was all just for fun.

KTAV finds local action

Right: In December during the annual food drive, Kennedy students contributed 2,819 canned goods and other items. Paul Stank, Paul Spies, and Debbie Francis had the job of counting the items.

Getting involved. Being a part of the action — not only in the school, but also in the community.

Twelve students found roles in their community this year through participation in the Kennedy Television Audio/Visual program (KTAV).

KTAV members this year presented 74 local cable productions. About 12 hours of work every week went into the regular broadcasting of school football, hockey, and basketball games, as well as tournaments.

For 12 years, Advisor John Parker has helped KTAV students prepare for a future in media production.

Crowd cards flash blue and gold. Students jump to their feet, wearing Eagle sweats, T-shirts, and hats. At important games and Region and State Tournaments, students made a visual, as well as audible, impact.

Providing the leadership to give crowd spirit a focus was the Student Council. "We wanted to bring the school together, to instill pride in students, to build a sense of loyalty," says Paul Spies, council president.

To accomplish this, the council made blue-and-gold crowd cards for use at major games, set up a school store to sell Eagle spirit clothing, and purchased a button maker to facilitate making buttons for use at tournaments.

Remembering Julie Burns, a member of the Class of '84 who was killed last spring in a car accident involving a drunk driver, the council set up a school chapter of SADD (Students Against Driving Drunk). By mid-winter, about 20 students were in the group.

Other council actions included sponsoring an all-school assembly at which "Dreammaker", a motivational slide show, was presented. The council also sponsored a drive to bring in items for the Bloomington Food Shelf. Blake Jaskowiak's homeroom came out as the winners.

By the time Spirit Week came around in March, the council could sit back and look with pride at a gym filled with blue and gold. "We think we helped to wards are nothing new for Profiles. Even so, the yearbook staff was pleased "and very proud to get that sixteenth All-American rating," says Co-Editor Marc Bryant.

"While we don't put out the yearbook just to get awards, it does make us feel good to know that somebody else thinks what we're doing is good," says Marc.

Marc and his co-editor, Dan Gieseke, led a 70-member staff in producing this year's 248-page book. Marc and Dan were invited to bring the book's opening section to the Josten's printing plant in Kansas last fall. There, they had opening section designs and photos critiqued by Josten's art designers.

In March, the editors participated in the Columbia Scholastic Press Convention in New York City. They worked in a session on graphic design and attended photo seminars.

"We're extremely proud of the quality that we think this year's staff built into the book," says Dan. "We had so many really good students on the staff, people who got along well and cared for one another and for the book."

"What pleased me about the year was that we were accomplishing something. We had a lot of pressure, but it felt good to see such good results," says Marc.

"Awards are great, but I think our best award will come when we pass out the book and see how excited everyone gets," says Dan.

Football faces frustration

Gone with the wins

It: Edina has just scored. Now it is up to Eric Holm, Tory Reynolds, Mike Walsh, Tom Koopman, and Tom O'Brien to minimize the damage by blocking the Hornets' extra-point attempt.

Left: Tight end Tom Koopman snares a short pass and speeds to the open hole for extra yardage.

W ith the clock ticking down and about two minutes left in the game, the situation appeared grim. The Eagles had the ball on their own 30 yard line, and they were facing a 14-7 deficit against Edina.

Hope rose on the sidelines as the team marched down to Edina's two-yard line. Helping that drive was Dave Fuecker's 60-yard "Hail Mary" pass reception. There, with just four seconds left on the clock, a Mike Beckman pass was tipped by an Edina defender, falling lifeless yards behind the waiting hands of tight end Jeff Zellmer.

Yet another victory had eluded the Eagle football team. Similar scenes were replayed over and over again during a painful, frustrating season.

Marred by injuries and player inconsistency, the season ended with a 3-6 final record.

And disappointment. Believing themselves to be a championship-calibre team, players endured those losses in a season that Coach Mike McKay called "close, so very close. We could just as easily have been 6-3 instead of 3-6." But the clock stopped before the wins were there.

hough the season was mostly one of frustration for football players, there were individual accomplishments that served to soften the disappointment felt by players and coaches alike.

Even though their individual performances were not enough to ensure team success, some players still earned their moment in the sports spotlight.

The team's Most Valuable Player, Jeff Zellmer, earned All-Conference and All-State, second team, honors.

Joe Rud also was named to the All-Conference team, despite missing the final two games due to a broken leg suffered in the Edina game.

Three players were named to the All-Conference, Honorable Mention, team: wingback Mike Haley, tackle Eric Christenson, and cornerback Chad Nelson.

Captains Jon Sharratt, Mike Beckman, and Dave Meier were three other consistent Eagle gridders, says Mike McKay. "They led by example, both on and off the field," he says. Meier and Sharratt led an Eagle line that included Rich Lukasezck, Mike Wilson, Eric Holm, and Tom Koopman. That line rated second in the Lake South.

For these players, as well as the rest of the team, the game that will stick in their minds was the season finale against Jefferson. McKay described it as a highly emotional game that showed a great deal of intensity and desire on the Eagles' part.

That game featured two powerful offenses. A psyched Eagle team traded blows with the playoff-bound Jaguars. When the final whistle blew, Jefferson had more points, but the Eagles, says McKay, had won a moral — and physical — victory.

Their play in that game helped the team to remember a season of hard-fought football, and not just losing football.

Winning . . . again

Region soccer force

Consider what they had going against them: only two starters were back from the previous season, and there was a complete turnover on defense. Boys' soccer faced a year of rebuilding.

And build they did . . . into a powerful Region force. That they had lessons to learn was obvious in the season's first game, a 7-1 loss to Burnsville. Then came two wins that led the team through eight games without a loss and the league lead.

That string included a scoreless tie with that same powerful Burnsville team that had beaten the Eagles so badly a month earlier.

Finally, the season came to an emotional end during a 2-1 Region final loss to Edina. The team that had so much to learn just a few months earlier had turned out to be a serious threat for the Region title, finishing two goals from State.

Left: Trying to run away from his defenseman, Sarung Phang showed incredible speed. His speed and skills helped him to score four goal and get four assists. That made him fourth in overall points on the team.

Record doesn't tell

ith nine returning varsity players, the girls' soccer team had high expectations.

The win/loss record usually tells how the season went. But ask any member of the team and she'll tell you that wasn't true this fall.

Their season was better than their record of 6-9. The games were all close, especially the 2-1 loss to the eventual Region champs, Jefferson. That game was the peak of the season. "Everyone gave 110 percent," says senior Barb Jaeger.

Goalie Dawn Volkmeier had three penalty shot saves to keep the game really close.

Other outstanding players throughout the season were Kelly Berke, Ann Gierman, Jaeger, Lisa Ramey, and Laurie Vidmar. "All were sturdy players who could be counted on," says Coach Lynn Aaze.

She noted that Volkmeier, Ramey, and Jaeger — the team's tri-captains — gave the team a positive attitude and good leadership. That attitude and a spirit of friendship helped motivate the team to put forth its best effort.

Hard practice was the order of the day as this team worked to improve. No complaints were heard, just words of encouragement from girls concerned about their teammates' progress.

"It was a real team with real team spirit," claims Coach Aaze. "Those on the bench worked hard and backed those who were playing on the field to the end."

"Everybody was friends and everybody accepted everyone else," commented Vidmar, a sophomore. And it was that friendship that caused the girls to believe in the success of their season, whether or not they had gotten the wins that had been expected of them.

Right: Racing down the field, Michelle Gilliam attempts to kick the ball away from her opponent.

Below: Trying to get a jump on the rest of the field, junior varsity runners lunge forward with a sudden burst of energy. Starting out their race are Sean Olsen, Brad Kruse, Luan To, Derek Schramm, John Delestry, Raj Dash, Bob Gerlach, Todd Nelson, Mike VanBlaricum, Mike Pakkala, and Chuck Nistler.

Harriers ranked in state

Name the sport. Some will like it; some won't. That's because everyone has his own ideas of fun. What's drudgery to some is sport to others.

One of those sports is cross country running. Sure,

the workouts are grueling. But when a team ranks high at the State Meet and the Coach is Tom Hayden, the sport definitely can be fun.

The popular coach has developed the once-anonymous team into a powerhouse, earning himself Region 6AA Coach of the Year honors along the way.

During a season of success boys out for the sport placed second in the conference. Paced by the league's No. 1-rated runner, John Laymon, the boys earned a 40-9 record.

At Regions, they took fifth while Laymon was earning third-place honors. Laymon continued his dominance by finishing fifteenth in the highly competitive State Meet. "He's a tremendously coachable kid," stated Coach Hayden.

All-Conference honors went of course to him, as well as to his Co-Captain, Lars Erickson, and fellow senior Jeff Yeager.

Other runners noted by Hayden for their excellent progress included Mark McDiarmid, Paul Adams, John Torvik, and Guy Carlson.

Girls out for cross country were also in the midst of their best season ever, also finishing second in the conference, with a 36-12 record. And, like the boys, the girls also placed fifth in Region competition.

Hayden praised the girls like Peggy Schad, Stacy Murphy, Amy Thole, Amy Moren, Sue Timpone, Christine Wallace, Aimee Lembeck, Mary Moody, and All-Conference winners Barb Peters and Nancy Hill.

Above: All-Conference runner Barb Peters leads the team to a second place finish in the conference meet at Rich Acres golf course. Another All-Conference winner was Nancy Hill, Co-Captain Stacy Murphy with Peggy Schad finished close behind. The team increased in size and wins during their best season ever.

Left: Cruising by the opposing teams, Lars Erickson shines. "He's a dedicated runner," replied Coach Hayden. Erickson's perfect form earned him a third overall place. Summer mileage was a plus in Lars' winning season.

Far left: Varsity Captain John Laymon watches from the sidelines, hoping to hear the final results of the race. Laymon was Kennedy's top runner this season, finishing fifth in the State Meet.

Constantly striving Concerned. Concerned as a team. Volleyball players all were concerned about playing well, and playing as a team. Maybe that is why they earned their best season in the last four years.

Their hard work produced a 15-7 record.

When the team did lose, they took comfort in the fact that most of their defeats were at the hands of teams ranked in the top ten in the state.

Coach Laurie Johnson praised the team for their unity. "It was a fun team to coach, and I was proud of them," said Johnson. The girls were close, and that personal closeness gave the team a reserve to draw upon when the going got tough.

Captains Jackie Juengel, voted the team's Most Improved Player, and Marty Nelson, an All-Conference award winner, provided solid leadership.

Other award winners in this good season were Cindy Lambert, with the Hustler Award; Sue Fair with the Eagle Award; and Pat Slettehaugh, chosen as Most Valuable Player.

Perhaps it was at the Armstrong Tournament, suggests Johnson, that the team played its best volleyball. Or it was at the Eagle Invitational, where the hosts won it all.

Then again, there was the City Championship, won by defeating Jefferson three times. That championship helped buoy up spirits and hopes for a Region win.

That was not to be, however. Stopped by a Hopkins team that played better than it ever had, Johnson's team was stunned at its early elimination from playoffs.

Concern — and distress — clearly showed on the faces of sad volleyball players that night.

Right: Co-Captain Marty Nelson jumps high and tips the ball away from her opponent's reaching arms. Covering for Nelson are Cathy Landa and Sue Fair. Nelson's strongest position was at serving the ball.

Right: Teammates Sue Fair, Cindy Lambert, Marty Nelson, and Jackie Juengel, give their full attention to meeting the opponent's serve. The team's overall record of 15-7 was the best in the last four years.

Girls' basketball breaks a record

Rebuilding ... or, make that building ... a winning team. That's what new Coach Don Carruth and the girls' basketball team did this year, climbing from a 6-14 mark last season to a 12-9 record in 1984.

While the season began as all others have, with drills and conditioning, Coach Carruth and his assistant, Jason Lamont, made it fun. Co-Captain Marty Nelson credits the coaches with helping the girls to believe in themselves.

"The girls began to gain confidence and a desire to change the reputation of the team from a loser to a winner," says Nelson.

Leading the team in scoring were juniors Jeni Krei, with a 14-point average per game, and Michelle Morey, with 10.3. Krei earned All-Conference honors, while Morey got Lake South Honorable Mention notice.

Most memorable of the 12 wins was a 55-46 victory over Jefferson. That marked the first time in eight years that the Kennedy girls had beaten that team.

Even though Region tourney play ended more suddenly than expected with a loss to Hopkins in the quarterfinals, the team still had accomplished what Carruth had hoped they would at the season's beginning. They had learned that winning was possible, and that winning was a lot of fun.

Above: Their weeks of preparation have paid off in a tightly executed routine. Synchronized swimmers Vergene Kruse and Mona Ibrahim flash smiles of pride as they perform their routine.

Right: In the midst of a synchronized swimming competition, Karol Sorenson and Sheryl Pike strive to hold their ballet leg position as they wait for judging to be completed.

Original strokes

Left: With strength and perfect form Debbie Miell exhibits another perfect dive. She qualified for State three years in a row. Her experience and confidence earned her a twelfth place spot this year.

Respectability. All teams need it. And some get it because, of course, they have earned it. Girls' out for swimming got little respect, however, for no one pays much attention to a 1-7 record.

That was sad for the team's divers, for they went through the season unbeaten. Unfortunately, their record was but part of an overall girls' swimming point total, and the effect of their wins was diluted by the swimmers' heavy and consistent losses.

Diving Coach Jack Fallon

was especially pleased with the performance of his top two divers, Tri-Captain Debbie Miell and Jenny Cronkhite. The girls were top finishers in meet after meet.

The girls in the races in the pool, however, gave the season a different look. Stung by six consecutive losses, the team was particularly frustrated by a two-point defeat at the hands of Jefferson. Finally, a win over St. Louis Park in the season finale gave them something to smile about.

Then, too, there was diver Miell's twelfth-place State Meet finish. It wasn't enough to give the team respectability, however. Respectability. All teams want it, but it has to be earned.

Above: With a look of determination and intensity Ann Jarrard patiently takes a breather before she is given her final score and time. Ann Jarrard has been a dominant swimmer for the Eagles.

Synchronized swimmers had barriers to leap. First, they had the bout with the School Board on whether to keep the sport alive or to drop it from athletic offerings. They won.

Their next barrier was the season itself. "We had only a few seniors. That made the younger swimmers work that much harder," according to Coach Judy Halvorson.

Even though she says the Synchronized swimmers did improve steadily from the first day of practice to the final season meet, the team still could not rise above a 4-4 record.

Determined and dedicated though they were, the Eagle team could not leap the final barrier to a winning season record.

On to new heights

Placing fifth at the State Swim Meet, the boys' team completed its finest season in the school's history. In fact, fifth-place finishes told the story of the conference, and Regions, as well, as swimmers gained a new measure of respectability.

Even though the team did so well, Coach Hugh Bradley was frustrated by a lack of depth that kept the boys from placing even higher.

"We usually won seven out of 11 events at most meets, but we did not carry second or third place to win the whole meet," says Bradley. "We had three or four great individuals, but we were lacking in depth beyond that," he says.

Those outstanding individuals included Tim Olson, who finished third at State in the 200-yard freestyle, and fourth in the 500-yard freestyle; Scott Ludgate, a second-place finisher at State in the 100-yard breast stroke; and Dan Anderson, Joe Buck, Olson, and Ludgate, who took seventh at State in the 200-yard medley relay.

With only Buck graduating off this team, Bradley was confident that a new season would find returning swimmers gaining even more respectability. "We could even be one of the top two or three teams at State," says Bradley.

A season of firsts. That was the way Coach Sue Germanson summed up the girls' gymnastics season.

Through hard work and individual sacrifice the girls had many new team firsts; including their first winning season in over eight years, at 4-2.

The season started out average, said Germanson, with team scoring down around 121, but by season's end, the girls' work had paid off, with a new Kennedy record of 130.05 posted in a single meet.

"The girls really had a positive mental attitude," said Germanson, "and this really helped, especially in individual competition." Led by Kathy Fitz and Tri-Captain Tona Barsness, individual performance was high, with Kathy and Tona qualifying for region finals, and Kathy taking fourth in beam in state competition.

Other strong point getters were Tri-Captains Gail Chase and Linda Paget in all-around competition, and Jenny Nord on parallel bars.

Team strength. The coach attributed it to the unity of the team members. "They're very close," said Germanson. "The girls were always pulling for one another."

Teamwork. Combine it with their positive mental attitudes, and you find the major factor that brought the girls' gymnastics team from an average start to a winning season record. The first winning season record. Ever.

Gymnasts rebuild

In gymnastics, like any other sport, experience is ever so necessary for a successful season.

This year's boys' gymnastics team lacked experience; thus, their record suffered. The team of ten, in which only two were seniors, had a conference record of 2-4.

However, through hard work and enthusiasm, the team improved greatly throughout the course of their schedule. Averaging but 87 team points at the beginning of the year, the boys ended the fall season with a team average of 102.

Though this year was lacking in victories, it was a year of rebuilding, one in which skills were developed, and one in which valuable experience was gained.

Skaters beat defeat

Pressure. Could they do it again? Could they live up to last year? Could the hockey team again make it into that biggest of all state tourneys, back into Minnesota State Hockey?

After winning eight of their first 10 games, the team was ready to answer "yes."

Then — a mid-season slump. The season that started out so well painfully took a downhill turn as the team won only three games in their final 10 in the conference. The team that wanted to return to State finished in a tie for second to last in the Lake.

Explained Coach Jerry Peterson, "We could get by without teamwork at the beginning of the season because our opponents weren't that good, but at the end we needed it to win."

Then came Regions. Records were wiped clean, goalie Jeff

Mies had recovered from a broken ankle, and teamwork had taken over.

Enthusiasm carried the team to a 2-1 win over Roosevelt in quarterfinals. Then Tracey Leeman scored with just 24 seconds left in the Southwest game to give the Eagles a 3-2 win and a spot in the Region finals

The opponent: Jefferson. Victors over Kennedy twice before, the Jaguars certainly were favored. But — this was the chance for revenge, and revenge can be a good motivator in hockey.

Thrill of a lifetime

Belief. It was there. The fans had it. The coaches felt it. But most importantly,

In the State Tournament opener against Burnsville, that confidence shone through as the team scored goals at the ends of the first two periods to stay in the game. Down 2-1 with four seconds left in the second period, the team took over control of the game when Steve Beiersdorf slid toward the goal on his stomach. Then, partially behind the goal, he poked the puck past the goalie.

That goal fired up the team for the third period; two more goals followed, and a favored Burnsville team was out of the tournament behind a 4-2 Eagle victory.

Having upset Burnsville, the team was confident that they again could win, this time over St. Paul Johnson. Again taking control of the game, the Eagles scored two in the third to defy critics and give Kennedy a 5-3 win and a place in the State Tournament finals.

It took tough defensive play by Co-Captains Jeff Wenande and Budd Bergloff to help keep Johnson away from Eagle goalie Bruce Wilson, who proved to be the surprise of the tournament.

While sportswriters and TV commentators struggled to explain how Kennedy had gotten that far, the team forged a solid attack against the strongly favored Edina team.

"Believe and act enthusiastically, and it will happen." So said Coach Jerry Peterson all season long. "He told us that over and over, and finally we did believe," says Bergloff.

Having played and lost to Edina twice in the season, the team knew Edina's attack. Down 2-0 in the second period, the team came into the game when Dallas Miller made the Edina goalie commit himself and then shot the puck past him for a penalty goal.

Next, Jeff Jungwirth scored to throw the game into a 2-2 tie at the end of two periods. No one was doubting the right of the Eagles to be in the final game anymore.

Finally, Edina pulled ahead to win 4-2 by "outscoring, but not outplaying Kennedy," according to Peterson.

With heads held high with pride, and more than a few tears running down their faces, players claimed their silver medals and the state second-place trophy.

They had gotten so far by believing in themselves. Peterson, named Coach of the Year, had taught them to believe, says Bergloff.

And after that final game, they could believe that being No. 2 in the nation's biggest hockey tournament was something to be proud of.

Each victory led to more confidence and to more pride. Frustrated by a lack of media attention and a state rating through much of the season, boys' basketball players finally gained state-wide respectability when they clinched outright possession of the Lake South championship with a 46-37 drubbing of Richfield in the regular season's final game.

That conference title was this team's third in nine years (others coming in 1975 and 1977) and helped to set the stage for a competitive fight for the Region 6AA title.

"Expecting to win becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy," commented Coach Steve Strommen. And this team, he says, expected to win all season long, even when critics did not.

Six skilled returning varsity players were primarily responsible for forging a 17-2 season record. Making up a well-rounded starting lineup were All-Conference picks Derek Schramm, Mike McCollow, and Jeff Zellmer; an Honorable Mention choice, Dan Haley; and two versatile team players, Steve Rushin and Brian Lieser.

These experienced players helped to provide the poise and confidence needed as the team raced Jefferson down to the wire in the Lake South title fight. Finally, the trophy was theirs, along with broad smiles, proud smiles.

Dazzling State Tourney display

Finally, it was their turn to get into the tournament spotlight.

Having watched fellow athletes dominate the State Wrestling and Hockey Tournaments, basketball players were all the more anxious to earn their own chance to play for the gold.

They claimed a place at State by sliding by Wayzata 49-44, and Edina 53-52, and then by smothering Jefferson 51-34 for the Region 6AA title.

Then came the newspaper interviews and television coverage, the hotel rooms and Civic Center lights. The Eagles were back at State for the third time in a month.

First came North Branch and a 6'6" center to challenge Kennedy's center, Derek Schramm. Schramm and the better-conditioned Kennedy team dominated the game, however, as a relatively easy 54-41 win put the team into State Tourney semifinals.

Rebounding provided the key for Kennedy's success; Steve Rushin alone pulled down 12 rebounds, while Mike McCollow led scoring with 16 points and a dazzling demonstration of ball control.

Then came Minneapolis North and a frustrating 59-52 semifinal loss. Despite pulling ahead in the first three periods, Kennedy was outscored 13-4 in the first five minutes of the fourth period, giving North the final advantage.

In the fight for third place the Eagles traded the lead all through the game with St. Paul Central, right down to the very last second when a final shot put Central over the top, 50-49.

Even though the gold eluded them, this team ended their State Tourney adventure by proving that they, too, were to be counted among Kennedy's state-class winter athletes.

ure dominance. It couldn't be expressed in any other way.

For the seventh straight year, Eagle grapplers again mangled minimal competition on their way to the conference crown.

During the regular season pin parade the Eagle matmen compiled a sterling 16-3 win loss record and outscored opponents 793-211. With stats like that, it was no surprise that the Eagles were given the No. 1 rating in the state polls at the end of the season.

Leading the power-packed Eagles were senior Co-Captains Chris Lembeck and Dan Collins. Lembeck, in his fifth season on the varsity, surpassed the school's previous record of most wins — 118 — midway through the season. Collins, a former Lincoln wrestler, led the team in pins with 21.

Possessing 12 wrestlers with a combined regular season record of 179-40-2, Head Coach Dave Arens had reason for optimism heading into the Region Individual Tournament.

His optimism was well founded as the Eagles put 10 of 12 wrestlers in State Individual competition. Region champs were Lembeck, Collins, Landan Hagert, Gordy Morgan, Jeff Johnson, Tom Breuning, and Dave Meier. Earning runner-up status were Steve Breyette, Dan Shand, and Mike Walsh.

And it did.

The Eagles were so good, in fact, that they breezed to yet another state berth with a 36-14 trouncing of Jefferson in the region finals.

Another Kennedy record was broken as 11 wrestlers gained All-Conference honors. Names like Lembeck, Collins, Ben Schad, Shand, Breuning, Meier, Mike Wilson, Marty Morgan, Jon Sharratt, Johnson, and Gordy Morgan sat atop this prestigious list.

One sad note, however. By midseason Coach Arens had announced his resignation. Arens, a wrestling institution at Kennedy and throughout the state, coached the team for the last nine seasons.

He will undoubtedly be missed.

But the tradition will undoubtedly continue.

A tradition expressed in Pure dominance.

Matting down wins

ou could feel the intensity. You could see the desire. Outside were the band, the

Each wrestler was preparing in his own way. Some shadow boxed, others sparred. From one wrestler, a softly murmured prayer.

It was time.

Eagle grapplers were awaiting the State Class AA Championship duel with Apple Valley. To get into the finals, the team had out-pointed Anoka, 37-15, and Rocori, 36-8. Now they wanted Apple Valley, the same Apple Valley that had beaten Kennedy twice during the regular season, and which the Eagles had narrowly defeated in a late-season match-up.

In the tightly fought State Tournament finale, the Eagles were left trailing 0-5 after the 98-pound match. Then Dan Collins pushed the team out in front, 6-5, with a pin at 105. After giving up a superior decision at 112 pounds, the team was hungry for Marty Morgan's 7-4 win at 119 which cut Valley's lead to one point.

Then Chris Lembeck put the team back in the lead with an eight-point win at 126. Following a 6-4 loss at 132, Gordy Morgan got the Eagles back on the track with a 7-6 triumph, putting the team score at 16-13.

Tensions mounted during successive three-point losses at 145 and 155 pounds; Valley took over with a 19-16 score.

Then began the final Eagle push for gold as Dave Meier put the team in the lead to stay with his superior decision at 167. Team score: 21-19. The final team win still seemed in doubt, however, when Mike Wilson was down 3-1 at 185 pounds. Wilson fought back to win, 6-5.

Finally, all heavyweight Landan Hagert had to do was keep from getting pinned. He did better than that, however. He capped off a 27-19 team triumph with a three-point decision that triggered an incomparable flood of gold-medal emotion.

More gold lay ahead, however, and the team turned to supporting three individuals who, barely an hour later, would finish their climb to the top of their weight classes.

Completing what turned out to be the best day ever for Kennedy wrestling, Collins at 105 pounds, Lembeck at 126, and Meier at 167 won state titles.

They made history, for never before had one school had three State Champions in a single tournament, let alone winning the team title in the same year.

Arens then made it a clean sweep for JFK by getting Coach of the Year honors. That award capped off a coaching career that included a Kennedy record of 168-23-1, and an overall career record of 234-39-1.

Above: "We're No. 1! That's what several Eagle grapplers gleefully shouted after their 27-19 triumph over No. 3 rated Apple Valley in the team championship final of the State Tournament.

Right: Straining to turn his Rocori opponent, Co-Captain Chris Lembeck looks for a pin. Lembeck proved to be the State's finest as he garnered the 126-pound Individual State Championship.

Of all those hundreds of victories, none will stay in Arens' memory as vividly as that last one, a State Championship for his last match as a wrestling coach.

You could feel the intensity. You could feel the exhilaration.

And, if you listened very closely, you could have heard the murmur of a little prayer of thanks for quite a perfect season.

"Although season records (4-9 for the boys, 4-12 for the girls) reveal losing battles, the winter was remembered as being more successful than that," claimed Coach Dick Green, "for losses were often decided by only a few points or a couple of seconds difference in times."

Seniors, like Co-Captains Steve Casperson and Dale Sedgwick, paced the strong-willed, struggling team to a 41-32 conference victory over Wayzata, a team that later took second in Regions.

Casperson, the team's only All-Conference selection, stood out as top scorer. Following closely behind were seniors Jeff Yeager and John Jaeger.

remarked Coach Green.

For the girls Captain Barb Peters proved to be especially strong in leading the team in each meet. Other top team point getters were Cheryl Nordos (a four-year letter winner), Christine Wallace, Julie Delestry, and Nancy Hill.

Perhaps the team's finest efforts were seen in the 39-34 win over Richfield. "We really looked strong in that meet," says Coach Green.

Many team members sought to improve their times by competing at area community races on weekends.

Even though temperature sporadically dipped to well below 20 below zero in December and January, the boys and girls out for this demanding sport never gave up. "We put on your long Johns, laughed at Coach Green's ski hats, and had a good time," winning or not, says Peters.

Leading the team were two state-class skiers, Barb Jaeger and Kristin Mascotti. They scored top points by finishing first and second in almost every meet.

Disappointment and frustration. Two words that adequately describe the boys' season.

The boy skiers were much better than their 1-10 record showed. "They just couldn't put it together in one meet," said Coach Dick Anderson. "When some skiers did well, others fell," he said.

However gratifying their individual performances were, they could never take away the frustration of losing three meets by a single point.

A sensation at State

Boys fall; girls rally

Same sport, but different seasons. And for Coach Gerald Molosky, that made all the difference. While his tennis teams faced common problems, success came more often for the girls than for the hapless guys.

Caught short on experience, the boys were not able to muster a record better than 3-9 overall, and a dismal 1-7 mark in the conference.

Molosky noted that with only one doubles team and two singles starters back from the previous year, the boys were at a distinct disadvantage in the competitive Lake South.

Spurred on by the successes of talented players like Jeff Wagner and Mark Redmond, the team did manage a late-season rally that found the boys beating Wayzata — ranked second in the Lake North — in the Region 6AA team tournament.

Fortunately for Coach Molosky's spirits, the girls fared better in the fall season.

Spurred on by the solid leadership and playing skills of Captains Kim Posch and Michelle Morey, the team improved constantly as the season slipped by. Adding depth to the team were Laura Beckman and Kristie Scherber, counted on for important doubles points in meet after meet.

Suffering a defeat to Minnetonka early in the season, the girls retaliated by beating them at the end of the season. Molosky noted that if they had won the first match, the team would have finished third in the conference, instead of fifth.

As it was, that fifth-place finish was the finest ever for the sport at Kennedy, and the girls left the season justifiably proud of an 8-4 overall record. Coach Molosky was proud, also, of tennis progress at a school not known as a tennis power.

Hitting to win

If a successful season is measured by victories, the 1983 Eagle baseball team could boast that success.

Coming off the worst season in years, the Eagles bounced back to a final season record of 15-7.

Pacing the Eagles through the season were timely hitting and consistent pitching.

Neither good opposing pitchers nor bad bounces could silence Kennedy batters as five players — Steve Otteson, Tony Friendshuh, Chuck Strack, Dan Tousignant, and Kevin Pleasant — hit over .300. Adding to the strong batting was a young staff of talented pitchers who came up with the needed wins.

All-Conference honors went to J. R. Peterson, shortstop; Todd Gores, catcher; and Otteson, first baseman. "These players provided the leadership and attitude needed for a successful season," commented Coach Buster Radebach.

That leadership and that winning attitude helped carry the team into the Region finals, where it took the eventual State Champions, Edina, to stop them.

When a team loses, the players often claim they lacked experience and depth. And, often enough, that proves to be a logical explanation.

But the softball team had both — five returning starters and a roster loaded with talent.

What was missing was seen in the win-loss column. Not expecting a mediocre 3-8 season, the girls felt particularly frustrated as they watched the losses count up.

And when they did beat teams like Minnetonka, Richfield, and Fridley, they wondered all the more why they couldn't win — not lose — more often than not.

Sprinting to State

ou dread the thought of it. You cringe, recoil, even withdraw. Even so, you know you cannot escape the reality of your situation.

You're out for track.

And you know what that means. Right. Work.

And is it worth it? All that pain, that effort? Ask Jennifer Bell. She'll tell you. Her talents — and work — paid off in a scholarship to Georgetown University.

in the 100-meter, 200-meter, and 400-meter dash events.

That meant, of course, that she won State Championships in all three events, also for the second straight year.

Bell wasn't the only record setter on this team, however. Joining Bell in the record-breaking department were Gail Chase in the 200-meter hurdles, and Barb Peters in the 3200-meter run.

Then, in the 1600-meter relay, Chase, Bell, Sharon Thole, and Donna O'Malley were favored to win most races.

Boys out for track had their favorites, also, favorites that brought in enough team points to give the boys their first Lake South conference title ever, as well as a fifth-place State Meet finish.

Willis Jacox was one reason the team earned all those points. He finished third at State in the long jump, then joined Greg Stevens, Ken VanOverbeke, and Troy Hirdler to place second in the 400-meter relay event.

Yet another relay placed second at state, with Jacox, VanOverbeke, John Hauge, and John Laymon in the 1600-meter relay.

Above: John Henry tries to find the extra power to beat his competition in the 200-meter run. John Hauge follows up to take third place. Both of these trackmen took part in the State Meet.

Below: All eyes were on this girl, Tri-Captain Jennifer Bell, who won three state medals.

Above: After pushing hard for the finish line, Lars Erickson gets a helping hand and congratulations from senior teammates Bill Bach and Darrin Diedrich. Erickson led the team in the 1600-meter event.

Teeing up wins

Their season was the finest ever for the sport at this school. Girls set new records in golf with a smooth 10-1 record that found players taking on the conference's finest golfers — and coming out as victors.

Consistency teamed up with natural skill to give the team its string of wins. Most consistent of the golfers were the captains, Lisa Elander and Jill Peterson. Their scores usually made them match medalists. In addition, the girls helped to develop an attitude of harmony on the team, says Coach Robin Carlson.

Carlson was quick to credit his assistant, Myron Olson, in the developing of this team, a team that placed second in the Lake Tourney, third in Regions, and as the city champions.

If the girls were consistent and successful, boys out for golf were inconsistent, but still mostly successful. It was their inconsistency that made the difference between a great season and a good one.

Finishing third in the Lake South is no small accomplishment, after all. But with a little more consistency, the team could just as well have been right up on top, says Coach Ted VanKempen.

Led by Captains Kent Dotas and Bruce Meyer, the boys ran up a 10-2 record that included an exhilarating win over Edina, a team that had not lost a duel match in 34 consecutive matches. That win found Jeff Moline, an All-Conference winner, and Tom Schardin leading the team with low scores.

Next most dazzling in their list of wins was the team's victory in the Sundance Tourney, which included all Lake Conference teams. The team brought home ten trophies during this season of success.

Far left: Even though her ball has strayed into the rough, Sarah Greimel's skill with an iron will have her back on the fairway again. Sarah's consistent performance helped make her a top varsity golfer.

Left: Even though the ball is only a few feet from the hole, this short putt counts the same as a long drive. Jerry Peer shows excellent concentration as he strokes the ball toward the hole.

Lockers: A place of individuality ame one place in this school that was yours and yours alone. Right. Your locker.

To some it was merely a hole in the wall, a place to throw unwanted homework. But to others it was a home-away-from-home.

Lockers became works of art — with the help of some tape and some imagination.

Right: Their first order of business was to select a class motto for use on the Class of 1984's graduation announcements. Class President Paul Spies, Vice-President Rick Luaasezck, and Secretary Mark Bonjean mull over a list of quotations from speeches from President Kennedy. In this year of the twentieth anniversary of Kennedy's assassination the officers chose a line from the speech that Kennedy was to have given in Austin, Texas, on the Historic day, Nov. 22, 1963: "This is a time of courage and a time of challenge." Class officers were elected as a slate to help plan Graduation announcements, Baccalaureate Graduation, and future reunion.

erm paper. Two of the words most dreaded in the vocabulary of a senior. Words that bring to Graduation: So close yet so far

It was your senior year. You had finally made it. But being a senior was not just all fun and games. The worries that come along with your last year in high school started at the end of your junior year.

For many people, the first realization that their final year of high school had arrived was having senior pictures

Far left: He may be tall, but Lee Bergin still has to be measured accurately by Margaret Heinsohn.

As soon as the school year began, there were the college entrance exams and college applications to worry about. Ordering your graduation announcements and being measured for a cap and gown came next.

Through all of these activities many seniors asked, "Why do we have to do all this so early when we don't graduate until next June?" Even though it did seem early to be getting ready for Graduation, the year went by all too quickly. Before you knew it, spring was here.

After 18, life changes forever

ell, kids, this is it. The big time. You hit your eighteenth birthday, and suddenly you became an adult. But was it what you expected?

Maybe you thought it would be like being hit by a lightning bolt from the sky. Zzzap! And life would never be the same again.

It wasn't that dramatic, however. Actually, it was not dramatic at all. If you are a male, you had to go to the Post Office to register for Selective Service. The military draft, after all. With Granada and Beirut and the Marines in the daily headlines, the prospect of a draft was far from appealing for would-be draftees.

More interesting was the idea of voting for someone other than a Homecoming king and queen and a class officer slate. Come next November, you could help to pick a real President. Pretty good, being 18.

What's wrong with a little dishonesty?

A little dishonesty helped homework. "Borrowing" answers saved time, and comparing notes improved test grades.

Luckily, a little dishonesty helped social life. Forging a pass made leaving school practically legal. Calling a friend in "sick" left the day open for almost anything.

for a ride home instead of walking. Interchanging parking permits eliminated needless parking tickets, fines, and a $1 transfer fee.

Surprisingly, a little dishonesty helped give more free time. If they told a sub that lunch started earlier than it really did, students had extra time to snuggle in the hall. Telling Mom that you absolutely couldn't go to school because of a severe case of senioritis left the shores Lake Nokomis ready for trouble.

Yes. A little dishonesty did go a long way toward improving your senior year.

Rooms reflect individual tastes

hether it was filled with soft stuffed animals and pictures of friends, soccer balls and tennis rackets, or the helmet and gloves she wore when she rode her Honda, a girl's room reflected her personality.

A girl could have a soft frilly room decorated with ribbons and bows or a room of plastic and chrome. It just proved that there were as many different types of rooms as there were girls.

Many mothers complained that their daughters' rooms were a mess. The common answer to this complaint was that everybody else's room looked the same way. More often than not, this statement held true. The reason given was that girls were too busy to be neat.

It made no difference what a girl's room was decorated like, or how messy it was, all girls' rooms had one thing in common: stashed somewhere in the room was her favorite picture of her favorite guy.

A guy's room: Dare to enter?

little less on the frilly side and a little more on the messy side could describe a typical guy's room.

Necessary equipment for a guy's bedroom: (1) a stereo system that all the neighbors complain about; (2) a weight set to build the muscles all the girls adore: and (3) posters of anything and everything having to do with girls.

A walk through a guy's room (that is, if you could walk through it) would show you his calendar of events from the last six months. In one corner, you see the remains of last season's football jersey. In the other, lies an empty pop can and what was left of last night's midnight refrigerator raid.

Rarely do you find any trace of schoolbooks in a guy's room. Usually the only literary material around is that which one buys sealed in plastic.

When and if you dared to enter a guy's room, and the furniture began to move all by itself, you couldn't help but be reminded of the man behind the mess.

Above: As Lisa Goodoien struggles to finish her term paper, the books seem to multiply before her very eyes. For Lisa, a simple paper becomes a major headache.

nxiety. It was to blame for the hours of butterflies felt in the stomachs of almost every student this year.

It seemed to appear during every game — important or not. If it didn't show up there, it was busy aggravating students who were cramming for next hour's exam during lunch break.

Even though that one seven-letter word was reduced to only four letters in most students' vocabulary, all of the hard work you suffered through always seemed to pay off for you in the end.

Too important to be overlooked ou had arrived. You were one of 605 juniors now counted amongst upperclassmen. As such, you counted, for juniors were far too important to crowds and activities to be overlooked.

Far left: Ambassador John Murphy and Queen Lisa Pahl forget the cold and live it up in the royal golf cart.

The right age for a good time

Foolin' around and havin' fun. As a junior, you made sure you did all the right stuff, like decorating lockers, TP-ing a house, giving a swirlie, and maybe goin' to the party.

Far Left: Deanna Niemi bites the big one as she receives an incredible gift from Janelle Huston.

There you were, juniors, on the front lines of the action. What would the band or JB's, danceline or cheerleaders, or any athletic team you could name be without juniors to provide depth, strength, and spirit?

Up where you belong

Getting involved. Meeting people. Having fun. As one of 617 sophs, finding your own place in this huge building was a necessary adaptation. Maybe your place was in a crowd at a game. That's okay. You had friends all around you, and you had fun. Maybe your place was on a team, or in the band, a choir, or a club. Where it was, you joined in. And you gained a sense of loyalty and pride. You were an Eagle soph.

Left: Emitting screams of excitement as the Eagles make a good play, these sophomore football fans show that they have as much spirit as any upperclassman around.

So, this was high school. You knew it would be fun, but this was great. To be a sophomore in Coronation was to appreciate for the first time just how grown-up and exhilarating high school can be. Great. And the best part was that two more years lay ahead.

Proving your worth

laying with the big kids. Gosh. Last year, Oak Grove. This year, the Big Time. Was that really you, out there with upperclassmen? Accepted by upperclass people who just a few months before had seemed so . . . sophisticated to you? Yes, you were — or could be — accepted, by anyone, anywhere. It didn't take long to figure out how. Just prove your worth, prove you, too, had something to give. Dare to try.

Relating with their students was a must for teachers, for it was the key to opening up avenues of good learning.

How did they do it? Some said by building friendships. "When students accept me, like me, as a person, I think they respond much more favorably to what I am trying to teach them," says John Sulack, photography teacher.

Says Don Carruth, Health teacher, "I try to give my students a positive experience. I try to be friendly to them in or out of the classroom."

Above: Having studied about the origin of holidays in their Humanities class, these students decided to start a new tradition; so began the first annual Miss Traub Day. Gary Hake, Brian Lieser, Sarung Phang, Paul Block, Jim Glaros, Chris Lembeck, and Lisa Goodoien celebrate with a cake for the teacher, Sharon Traub.

Biology teacher Orville White says, "I sincerely care for them as people."

Trying to understand the student's point of view is important to physical education teacher Nancy Jimenez. "I try to listen to them and respect them for the ideas that they have."

"You cannot be phoney about it," says Sulack. "Students know when you're for real."

Above: It's kill or be killed for Rocky Elton as he plays a mountain man part for a history lecture about the

Teaching. What makes it difficult? Ask ten teachers, and you'll probably get ten different answers.

There is no one solution. No easy answer. It all depends on the teacher and his personal viewpoint.

So what is the hardest part of teaching? What obstacles are faced day by day?

According to science teacher Jim Burke, the most difficult thing is "motivating students to participate in their own learning." To gain from the "sport" of education, one must "play," says Burke.

For Ron Cavanaugh in business classes, planning and presenting a good lesson are his two main obstacles. "There are so many topics that I find it tough selecting material that should be covered," he says. "And the lesson, no matter how well planned, can always bomb out."

In social studies, Rocky Elton's most difficult task is easing the pressure of the "transition of my sophomores from junior high to the more competitive atmosphere of senior high."

Pressure. In English, Clarice Swisher feels hourly pressure. "How," she says, "do I determine my purpose? How do I get there so that students comprehend? How do I read their eyes and faces and questions to assess the comprehension of the lesson? What do I do or say next to lead them to understanding?"

Classroom obstacles? Indeed. Says Swisher, "Teaching is fun, challenging work, but very demanding."

What works? What does the job? What facilitates the learning process?

Says English teacher Pat Fatchett, "You must try to get to know your students and be able to talk with them about things in their lives, not just subject-related stuff. You show an interest in their lives, and they will show an interest in you and what you teach."

"By injecting humor and personal experiences that relate to the course," Ron Johnson says he believes he makes Psychology more appealing to students.

"Learning should be fun."

Above: Emotions take over as Sophomore Attendant Barb Spies prepares to enter Coronation. Pat Fatchett wipes away running mascara as Barb Spies and Anne Lensegrav, Junior Attendant, await the processional.

Larry Thomforde in Biology says, "An effective teacher creates a classroom environment that is conducive for student learning and growth."

"Teachers should have enough flexibility and freedom to develop the best delivery techniques for themselves. We are all different."

Says Don Moeller, English teacher, "Knowledge of the subject material, spirit of optimism, and a willingness to help are three important aptitudes for a person to be an effective teacher."

Whatever the method, whatever the approach, favorite methods or not, all teachers were challenged daily to motivate students to learn.

To learn well.

What methods of teaching work?

Faculty

Some moments are too good to forget. Those moments are the times that teachers realize that they did indeed choose the right job.

Math teacher Judy Halvorson says everything seems worthwhile when a "student turns to you and says, 'Oh! Now I understand!'"

For German teacher Judy Johnson, the best times are not found in the classroom at all. She has taken two summer trips to Germany with students. Says Johnson, "Watching students mature before my very own eyes and seeing them really take advantage of their opportunities to speak German" gives her incomparable pleasure.

For some teachers, the finest memories have been made on the playing field. As a soccer and track coach, Jim Klaseus says he has found moments of great excitement when teams have been successful, as when the boys won the State Soccer title in 1981.

Usually teachers will say that the moments they like to remember are the ones that involve high emotions and close student contact.

Demanding.

The pay is usually less than expected; the duties are usually more than expected.

Math teacher Blake Jaskowiak described his first teaching job in Murdock, MN, in 1954. "I taught math, phy. ed., and tenth grade biology. I coached football, basketball, and baseball. My salary was $3450. My assignment to teach biology was absurd. I only had two undergraduate courses and certainly was not qualified."

ESL instructor Richard Halverson's first job entailed more than just teaching. "I did the class plays, the homecoming floats, took tickets at games, was the senior class advisor and planned the senior prom."

Their first teaching jobs may have been a bit tedious, but there were always things that broke up the monotony, like "finding a live frog in my desk drawer," says English teacher Marilyn Wilhelm.

"The superintendent interviewed you, found you a place to live and let you know that if you were going to party, go 30 miles out of town," says home economics teacher Geraldine Bradford.

"Strangely, I do look back on those years as very satisfying," confesses Blake Jaskowiak, "because the young people in the community respected and liked their teachers."

What was your first job?

What exactly do students get out of high school? Of course they get the basics of learning, but they also get the basics of life.

"High school education," says English teacher Sharon Traub, "should give all students the basic skills for survival, and, also, the tools for continuing their education, if they wish."

According to business teacher Duane Zaun, "What is learned in high school should serve as a foundation upon which all subsequent learning is based."

But teachers at Kennedy also try to give their students much more than information.

"As teachers, we try to instill through our own enthusiasm and example, the desire to learn, the curiosity to explore and the skills to carry it through," says Gayle Collins of the Kennedy Resource Center.

Other than just knowledge, students leave high school with different attitudes.

"Certainly one thing to attain would be respect," explains math instructor Harry Kitts.

What is wanted most for the student by teachers is a mixture of knowledge and good feelings about the years they've spent at Kennedy.

Says auto shop teacher Guy Blessing, "I would only hope that all students could leave Kennedy with good feelings about themselves and pride in their accomplishments while in school."

No job is perfect, including teaching. So it is that just about every teacher has something that he wishes he could change about the job.

If he could, math teacher Larry Kingery says he would increase the respect teachers have in the community. He regrets the "low status in today's society that (teachers) presently hold," he says.

For Physics teacher George Drier, time is a problem. "Teachers with a lab course do not get the time needed to prepare for the classroom and lab. This lack of time causes great stress for many science teachers," he says.

Pressures of the job often leave teachers drained, so much so that sometimes they find it hard to cope with their own children at home. "Listening to problems, excuses, and new insights often leaves me worn out when I come home to my own children," says Woody Bjork, World and American Studies instructor.

According to phy. ed. teacher Gerry Molosky, low salaries is the No. 1 problem for people in education. "I have a daughter in retail sales—for all of 10 years — and she earns a higher salary than I do," he says, after 35 years of teaching.

With these problems a part of the profession, is the job worth it? "One cannot teach for that many years and not love teaching," says Molosky. "It's worth it."

What in teaching needs changing?

Faculty

Pick a career. Any career. You certainly have a full deck to choose from. All those jobs. But which one? Which will be right for you?

Teachers, too, had that decision to make. And they chose teaching. But why? What made them choose teaching of all the professions available to them?

"In high school, I was an AFS student in Germany," says German teacher Judy Johnson. "Teaching German would be, I hoped, a way to share what I learned by that experience."

English teacher Clarice Swisher says she is grateful for what her job offers her. "I think about people in other jobs who have to read computer printouts, office memos, stock tables, realty listings. I come to work everyday and read the finest writing that has been written in English, and it's my job," she says.

"When I finally came to the realization that I had to do something, I chose a short route, namely teaching. I've never been sorry," says math teacher Ralph James.

Business teacher Kathleen Gould says, "I like seeing students grow through the year. We work together to achieve," and that pleases her. She claims to have job satisfaction.

When social studies teacher John Bloom was considering professions, he chose teaching because "of my interest in people."

These teachers, then, feel they chose the right card from the deck of professions. They hit the jackpot.

If it were not for students, teachers would not have jobs. Right. But if it were not for unruly, conniving, disruptive students, teachers also would not have headaches, ulcers, and prematurely graying hair.

But because students do cause problems, teachers have to be prepared to discipline them. Photo teacher John Sulack says that controlling students is easier "if you establish respect early on. Once students respect you, you can relax with them."

In World and American Studies, Tom

Siebold says he tries to get discipline by getting students to understand that "they have self worth. Students will be reasonable in class if they understand that they are doing work that is meaningful."

In Physics, George Drier says trust is important, "And, after 20 years in teaching, I don't think of discipline. My technique of teaching sets a course that is easy and trouble free."

In Computer Science, Dave Arens says that "motivation isn't a problem," because they like what they are doing, "students do not cause problems."

Above: His view this year was of the Kennedy parking lot. Next year, he'll be looking at golf courses.

Two months before the end of school, Bernie Larson ended his 34 years of school; that is, he retired after 20 years at Valley View, the Annex, Olson Junior High, and 14 years as Kennedy's head custodian. Now he and wife Lucille are regulars on a Florida golf course.

During his many years in the schools, Larson says he came to "really enjoy the kids. They've been so fun, so cooperative, great to be around," he says. "The teachers, too, have always been really cooperative."

"I'll miss the contact I have had with so many fine people during the years," says Larson. And the people here will miss him, too.

"That's because you won't find anyone in Bloomington who has done as much for kids as Bernie," says hockey Coach Jerry Peterson. "Bernie has been a major factor in the success of this school."

With our thanks!

Was it worth it? Was it worth all the work, the worry, the time and effort it took to put out this yearbook?

As editors, we often were asked this question, but we never had to think twice about the answer. Of course it was worth it, for what feeling could possibly match the sense of accomplishment and pride that goes along with the publication of a book like the 1984 Profiles?

We're extremely proud and grateful to a staff of 72 students who put so much life and fun and beauty into this book. To them, our friends on 1984 Profiles, we give thanks.

Thanks, too, go to John Parker for his hours of audio-visual help on the Profiles Slide Show, and to John Sulack and Don Specht, Photo teachers, for their willingness to help our photographers.

We remember with great appreciation the help of Burt Hedstrom, our Josten's printing representative, and Pam Ortega, our Josten's in-plant friend. They did so much to smooth the way for a good production of the book we cared so much about.

We are grateful to Scherling-Pletsch, our senior photographers, and especially to Jon Bushard, our local S-P man who became a part of our Profiles family.

Finally, we would like to give our endless thanks to Jon Kuklish, who, with undying dedication and perseverance, was the cornerstone of this book of great distinction. His efforts as journalism advisor have made Profiles 1984 a book second to none!

Yearbook Journalism students at Bloomington John F. Kennedy Senior High School planned, designed, and prepared all material for the 1984 Profiles yearbook, Volume VIX part of the school's elective Journalism program. Students each worked on the yearbook during one class hour per day, in addition to frequent after-school and evening meetings. Profiles was printed by Josten's American Yearbook Co., Topeka, Kansas. Representing the publisher at Kennedy was Burt Hedstrom. The official senior portrait photographer was Scherling-Pletsch Studio. Underclass portraits were by Scherling, Inc.

Consisting of 248 pages in a 9x12 format, Profiles was printed on 80-pound white enamel paper. A 150-point line screen was used for halftones. Screened backgrounds, when used, resulted from 10-, 30-, and 100-percent screenings of black. The cover consists of 150-pound binder's board with a fabric material, onto which an original airbrush paint design was applied through silkscreening. This design was reproduced in full four-color reproduction.

For the theme section, division pages, and closing pages, Lubalin Graph Bold and Lubalin Extra Light type were used, with headline enlargements being produced at the school. On other pages 60-point Helvetica Bold headline type was used for main headlines, and 36-point and 18-point for subheadlines. Body copy was 10-point Helvetica with 2-point line spacing; captions were set in 8-point solid Helvetica italic.

Ninety-one percent of the student body purchased yearbooks at a cost of $16 per book. That charge covered all printing costs in addition to paying for some film and processing costs and print paper for photographs. Considerable darkroom and film materials were supplied by Scherling-Pletsch. All slide show film and processing were paid for out of yearbook sales receipts.

You was too

All good things do come to an end, after all. As exceptional as this year was in so many ways, it could not go on forever.

Nor would you have wanted it to. That would have spoiled something best hoarded in your memory.

That's what makes memory so special. You settle back with your yearbook, look at some pictures, and get back into 1984.

Remember? JB's electrifying the stage with songs and faces that sparkled with professional class. JB class.

Remember? Making a fool of yourself — and loving every minute of it — during Spirit Week as a boy-turned-Kolleen, or at a tournament as a painted-up, blue-and-gold screamer.

The year that was too good to last . . . lasted just long enough, and was just good enough to be a prime time in your life.

for athletic contests, the spotlighted Eagle stole the show in the school's Nature Center.

sharp crunch of snow under your feet. After a Friday night basketball game, Tarita Tacey.

Just you've

in case forgotten.

No matter how you look at it, high school has been your life. And, depending on your grade, you have one to four years of memories tucked away, memories of things you think you never will forget.

But you will. Until, that is, you pull out your yearbooks, and drift back into each year. Start that process, that remembering, right now.

Go back four years, to 1981. Remember? Mike Lembeck and Genelle Konewko, Homecoming king and queen, "The Diary of Anne Frank" on stage, the band in the Fiesta Bowl in Arizona and the choir in Florida.

The Torch won its second Pacemaker award, making it the top newsmagazine in the USA, and the yearbook again was All-American.

And in athletics, wrestlers were back at State again, placing third, while John Morgan and Dave Wiklund won individual State Championships.

Left: Everyday he had walked by and looked, for President Kennedy's portrait lay at the heart of the school. Now Tony Whitbeck pauses to study the face that symbolizes the school.

Prayer won, and you were on to a new year, to 1982. That year another Konewko, Jennifer, was the queen, and Joe Churchill the king. "Charlie Brown" was put on in JFK's first-ever Dinner Theatre, and the JB's, as per usual, were putting on over 80 shows. Along with the choir, they won a standing ovation at Orchestra Hall before touring in Colorado.

Soccer dominated fall sports, with the boys winning State Champion honors and the girls placing at State. Wrestlers again took third at State, and Chris Lembeck won his first state gold medal.

That winter, Lincoln was chosen to be closed, and you looked ahead to 1983 and a year of merging about 600 Lincoln students and another 80 from Jefferson into a new JFK.

Profiles' theme, "Better Than Best", seemed to be perfect for describing that year, for successes ran all through the school. While former Lincoln students were struggling for acceptance at Jefferson, they were delighting in their quick integration into every aspect of JFK.

Paul Grobe and Jean Dagendesh were crowned at Homecoming, and spirit abounded as the football and wrestling teams placed third, and the Kolleens fourth, at State.

Willis Jacox and Greg Snyder took All-State football and soccer honors, respectively, and Blake Bonjean won a State Championship in wrestling. And Jennifer Bell? She took three gold medals in track, while the hockey team went to State. It would take a truly exceptional year to top all of that. And that's precisely the kind of year the school had in 1984.

"PM Magazine" filmed a Billy Joel feature here, and CBS put it on nationwide. Dave Meier and Lisa Pahl wore the Homecoming crowns, the band went to Colorado, and the choir to Disney World in Florida. The yearbook won its sixteenth All-American award, tops in the USA.

Spirit swept through the school, led by the Student Council and its buttons and blue-and-gold crowd cards that captured the notice of TV camera at state tournaments.

More than anything else winter sports dominated the year, especially when JFK swept past Jefferson to go to State in a triple crown of boys' tourneys: hockey, wrestling, and basketball.

Individuals were winning, too, with gold medals going to wrestlers Dan Collins, Chris Lembeck, and Dave Meier, a silver to skier Barb Jaeger, and a silver and bronze to Scott Ludgate and Tim Olson, respectively, in swimming.

And to think that once upon a time people used to put down the East Side. Well, no more. You've got altogether too much to brag about in your high school memories ... just in case you've forgotten.

almost all school events, trying to ensure coverage of every aspect of a student's life in a year.

He's Jon Kuklish, Minnesota Distinguished Journalism Teacher of the year (1977), holder of 16 All-American ratings, and winner of Pacemaker honors.

Through his dedication, he has shaped the JFK yearbook into a highly respected award-winning operation involving 70 students.

With these honors to his credit, Kuklish has decided to step down as journalism advisor, leaving the community and the school with much to be proud of.

More than anything else, students will remember him with his camera, trying to get just one more shot.
